To complete the ambitious proposition for a continuous line from ocean to ocean, it was necessary only to connect the western terminals of the Baltimore & Ohio with the eastern terminals of the Southern Pacific and Union Pacific, and this purpose the Illinois Central serves amply. Its line from Omaha to Chicago ties together the Union Pacific and Baltimore & Ohio, while the Illinois Central branch from Chicago to New Orleans gives the Southern Pacific entrance into Chicago and the seaboard.

Taken together this system, if unified, puts under one control more than 23,000 miles of track, capitalized at more than $1,700,000,000.

NINE MEN KILLED IN ACCIDENT

Hotel Building at Long Beach, Cal., Mass of Wreckage.

Long Beach, Cal., Nov. 10.—With no warning, save the cries of the workmen who first felt the floors sag beneath their feet, five stories of the central wing of the new $750,000 Bixby hotel collapsed at 9:35 Friday morning, carrying nine men to death in the tons of tangled wreckage. About 150 artisans and laborers were scattered through the structure at the moment it fell, and of these nearly 100 were carried diwn in the ruins.

Five bodies have been taken from the mass of debris in the basement and one of the injured died at the Long Beach hospital.

Three other bodies have been located in the ruins, making nine the total known dead. Thirteen men on the contractors' rolls are unaccounted for and nine injured are being cared for at the hospitals. None of the injured will die.

Mysterious Find.

She went down to a swell play the other evening, attired in a superb white gown and wearing a splendid opera cloak. In fact, she was stunning. As she seated herself, she was about to remove the long red cloak when with horror and consternation depicted on her face she discovered something! My, what a predicament! She had prepared supper before leaving for the show, and there, covering the front of the white skirt was a lowly calico checked apron. She managed to remove it after the house had darkened, and the next morning the sweeper at the Colonial found an apron under one of the seats. —Pittsfield Journal.

HOW DEBILITY SHOWS

And Why Dr. Williams' Pink Pills Are a Specific for Dangerous Physical Declines.

The symptoms of general debility vary according to the cause but weakness is always present, a tendency to perspire and fatigue easily, ringing in the ears, sometimes black spots passing before the eyes, weak back, vertigo, wakefulness caused by inability to stop thinking, and unrefreshing sleep. The cause of the trouble may be some drain on the system or it may be mental or physical overwork, sometimes insufficient nutrition due to digestive disturbance. In the latter case there is generally a loss of appetite and a coated tongue as well as general languor and debility.

Miss Lula M. Metzger, a stenographer, living at 71 Mill street, Watertown, N.Y., suffered for over a year from general debility. "It was caused by overstudy," she says, "and I had no ambition, didn't want to go anywhere, my food didn't taste good, I was run down, lifeless and listless. I took medicines but they failed to help me. Finally friends recommended Dr. Williams' Pink Pills to my mother and she got some for me. I took them for some time and was entirely cured and have had no return of the trouble."

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills cure debility because they actually make new, red, rich blood, and as the blood carries nourishment to all the organs and tissues of the body, nerves as well as muscles, the new blood stimulates the organs to do the work that nature expects of them and normal health follows. Not only is this treatment sufficient to cure debility but many severe nervous disorders as well.

The pills are sold by all druggists, or will be sent postpaid, on receipt of price, 50 cents per box, six boxes $2.50, by the Dr. Williams Medicine Co., Schenectady, N. Y. Send for free diet book.

Queer Case.

Duluth—The wail of an infant on a marble slab in the dead room of a local undertaking establishment this morning amazed those who heard it, for the little one had been brought in the night before to be prepared for burial, and none but dead persons were supposed to occupy the slabs contained there.

The infant, it seems, was not dead when taken to the establishment, but it had appeared dead, and when brought in the usual arrangements had been made for the burial to take place later.

The infant was a boy about three weeks old. The child is now in St. Mary's hospital, in an incubator, and Dr. Robert Graham has hopes of its recovery despite the terrible exposure of ten hours in the chill of an undertaker's dead room, but it finally died.

Suicide.

Cloquet—Determined to make certain his attempt to end his existence, Philip Smith, aged sixty years, weighted his body with heavy stones, waded into the river at the dam a short distance northeast of here and fired a bullet into his head.

Death probably was instantaneous and the body sank at once to the bottom of the river, where the stones kept it weighted down until two boys playing about the dam yesterday discovered it. They notified others and the body was pulled out of the water.

Smith disappeared from his home two weeks ago, and it is apparent that he had been dead that length of time. The revolver with which the shooting was done was found at the bottom of the river near where the body lay. Smith was a dyspeptic and had become despondent over his inability to obtain relief from his affliction. He is survived by a widow and three children.

Squirrel Robs the Mail.

Winona—The robbing of the United States mail by a squirrel was a most unusual incident which occurred in this city.

Martin Daszkowski, one of the oldest mail carriers in the city, was on his regular rounds and had among his mail to be delivered an advertising card to which was attached a large walnut, inside of which was the matter advertised. A little squirrel, of which there are many in Winona, seeing the nut, jumped upon Mr. Daszkowski's shoulder and running down his arm with lightning speed took the nut and card from his hand, and then climbed a nearby tree where it investigated the contents of the nut.

Fortunately, upon discovering that the nut was not the kind it wanted, the squirrel dropped it and the card without damaging either, and they were later delivered to the proper address. The squirrels of Winona are tame and frequently climb upon pedestrians' shoulders looking for nuts or other food.

St. Paul—Gov. Johnson granted the requisition of Gov. O'Toole of Montana for the return of F. E. Garside, who is wanted there on a charge of forgery. JOHNSON'S VOTE KEEPS GROWING

HIS PLURALITY WILL FULLY GO 60,000 AND MAY REACH A HIGHER FIGURE.

Banner Republican Counties Give Him Good Majorities. St. Louis County Swings into Line for the Democratic Nominee,

Minneapolis, Nov. 10.—In 32 counties out of a total of 83 in the state, Gov. Johnson's vote is 71,314, as against 40,930 for Cole. Johnson's plurality in these 32 counties from which complete returns have been received, is 30,384. They include Ramsey and Hennepin counties, but not St. Louis, where Johnson's plurality has already reached 1,500 in incomplete returns.

If this rate is kept up in the remaining counties Johnson's plurality will be not less than 60,000. Following is the vote on governor in counties from which complete returns have been received:

County—	Cole	Johnson
Anoka	774	1,070
Carver	1,021	1,647

Winona	1,848	3,951
Total	40,930	76,314
Johnson plurality		30,384

The returns on the other state officers are very incomplete, but each county that comes in confirms the former opinion that Eberhart will have at least 25,000 and the other Republican candidates for state offices majorities of different sizes, running as high as 60,000 or more.

McCleary's District.

Complete returns reported by the county auditors of the counties in the Second district give W. S. Hammond a majority of 1,047 over McCleary. The total vote in each county is as follows:

	Hammond.	McCleary.
Blue Earth	2,796	2,295
Brown	1,825	1,300
Cottonwood	721	682
Faribault	1,297	1,673
Jackson	1,149	1,469
Martin	1,362	1,338
Murray	850	859
Nobles	1,123	911
Pipestone	691	676
Rock	651	580
Watonwan	1,089	754
Totals	13,554	12,507

Four counties have reported their vote on the wide-open tax amendment, and it has received a majority in each one. If the rest of the state holds up to this ratio the amendment will have a comfortable margin. The good roads and peddling amendments run higher in some places and lower in others, so their outcome is doubtful.

NORTH DAKOTA.

Final Outcome Shows that Burke and Fisk are Elected.

Fargo, N. D., Nov. 10.—The political situation has changed little within the last twenty-four hours. The Democrats still claim the election of their entire state ticket, occasional leaders doubting whether all have pulled through. The Republicans concede the defeat of Sarles for governor and Knauf for supreme court judge, but have the greatest confidence in the election of the rest of the ticket.

The scratching was done on Sarles and Knauf. In Cass county all the rest of the state ticket had majorities ranging from 600 to 1,200 votes. Sarles had less than 200 and Knauf was beaten by more than 1,000.

In Ward county the rest of the state ticket ran from 600 to 1,100 ahead of Sarles. Smaller counties report approximately the same percentage and the Republican leaders believe that unless Burke gets 6,000 or more majority over Sarles he will be unable to pull the other candidates through.

The actual returns still are delayed in many counties. One is still missing in Cass county, with all the railroad facilities at hand. In many counties querries for figures are answered by the statement that outlying districts have not yet reported.

Burke's majority over Sarles is placed at from 3,000 to 3,500 and that of Fisk over Knauf from 8,000 to 9,000.

BOY BANDIT HOLDS UP A TRAIN

Lone Youth Forces Pullman Crew to Collect His Booty.

Chicago, Nov. 10.—A lone boy bandit, weighing scarcely 110 pounds, held up the Golden State limited, the fast Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific train, Thursday night near Slater, Mo., and, telling the passengers that he was from Missouri, robbed the rear Pullman car, forcing the porter to collect in his cap the booty from the occupants of each berth. He allowed the women in the car to go unmolested, saying that "Jesse James never robbed ladies."

After securing about $70 from the passengers he lined up the Pullman conductor, flagman and porter, and prepared to invade the other cars, but was thwarted by the conductor, who, as he entered the forward car at the head of the line, snapped the lock and shut out the bandit. The youth then pulled the bell rope, shouting: "Good night, kiddos," and disappeared in the gloom.

Gets Freedom by Chance

MURDERER LIBERATED THROUGH MAN WHO PROCURED HIS CONVICTION.

Spends 23 Years Behind Bars of Auburn (N. Y.) Prison—Met Justice Jenks, His Benefactor, by a Strange Accident.

New York.—The circumstances that led to the release recently of Giuseppe Guidici from life imprisonment in Auburn prison show what an important factor chance is in the career of some men. Twenty-four years ago a mere boy in intelligence and experience came to this country from Italy. Behind him he left his four-year-old sister, Anna, whom he promised to bring over as soon as he had made enough money. Three months later he was under sentence of death for the murder of a countryman whom he shot in a quarrel.

He was first taken to Sing Sing, where his good behavior and quiet demeanor won him the praise and confidence of the prison officials, and in 1890 he was transferred to Auburn. For 20 years Guidici labored behind prison bars, utterly despairing that he would ever become a free man again. Last February, however, by strange chance, Justice Almet F. Jenks, of the appellate division of the supreme court, who in 1894, as assistant district attorney of King's county, conducted the prosecution of Guidici, met him in Auburn prison.

The justice, in company with Justice Nathan L. Miller, had gone to Rochester to attend a banquet given to the justices of the appellate division, and was the guest of Justice Rich, who suggested a visit to the prison. It was Sunday, and the warden, in showing them around, chanced to call Guidici, who was near by, to bring him a key. When the convict returned, Justice Jenks, much impressed with the quiet demeanor of Guidici, made inquiries about him.

When told the history of the man, the justice suddenly recalled that he had conducted his prosecution. Questioning the warden still further, he learned that of all trustworthy and well behaved convicts in the prison, Guidici was the model. He had earned the confidence of the warden and the keepers, and for 11 years had been a trusty with the freedom of the entire prison. Justice Jenks was touched, and calling the prisoner to him, said:

"Guidici, do you remember me? I was the district attorney who sent you here."

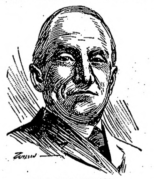
"No, sir," replied the prisoner.

"Would you like to be free?" continued the justice.

"Yes, sir, I would," rejoined Guidici. "I am contented here; they treat me very well, but I would like to be free. I have been here so long; 23 years," and bowed with grief, the convict hung his head while tears rolled down his cheeks.

Justice Jenks was much affected, and promised Guidici that he would try to secure his pardon. From that day he, as well as Justice Miller, labored until they obtained a full pardon for Guidici from Gov. Higgins. But the kind hearted justices did not stop there. They wanted to make the man's future as secure as possible, and accordingly Guidici has been sent to Cortlandt, N. Y., where Justice Miller has a farm. There work will be given Guidici for the rest of his days.

On his arrival in this city from Auburn, Guidici was looked after by Harry States, special officer of the appellate division, who at the expense of Justice Jenks took him to places of amusement and showed him the many changes that had taken place in the city in the past 23 years. He also spent much time in the Justice's chambers, where he has been shown marked attention and kindness.



GIUSEPPE GUIDICI.
(Man Whom Chance Freed from Life Imprisonment.)

When Guidici was convicted he spoke no English, and was unable to read or write. To-day he is a different man. During his long confinement he studied a great deal and speaks English fluently and with intelligence. He is about 53 years old. To a reporter he said:

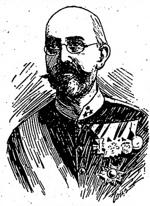
"Yes, I am happy to be free. I was very kindly treated in the prison, but I'm glad to be out. More than once I despaired of ever being a free man, and now I am going to start life all over again. The crime that I committed in a moment of anger has been atoned for, and in the future I will do my best to balance the evil committed, but above all, I shall never forget Justices Jenks and Miller."

Of his sister in Italy he said he had not heard since he went to prison, but he will try to find her and bring her to live with him.

MUST CHOOSE CROWN.

Recent Death Reopens Question of Succession to Duchy of Brunswick.

London.—The death of Prince Albrecht of Prussia, Regent of the Duchy of Brunswick, has reopened the question of succession to the Duchy —a question first raised on the death of the reigning Duke William in 1884. The heir to the Brunswick throne is the Duke of Cumberland, who is, however, excluded on account of his refusal to give up his claim to the throne of Hanover. The late Duke of Cambridge was also excluded owing to his refusal to give up his English appointments and residence.



DUKE OF CUMBERLAND.
(He Must Choose Between German and English Crowns.)

The Ducal house of Brunswick-Wolfenbuttel, extinct on the death of Duke William, was one of the most ancient and illustrious of the Germanic Confederation. His ancestor, Harry the Lion, possessed in the twelfth century the united Duchies of Bavaria and Saxony, with other territories in Northern Germany; but having refused to aid the Emperor Frederick Barbarossa in his wars with the Pope, he was, by a decree of the Diet, deprived of the whole of his territories, with the sole exception of his allodial domains, the principalities of Brunswick and Luneburg. These possessions were, on the death of Ernest the Confessor, divided between the two sons of the latter, who became founders of the lines of Brunswick-Luneburg, Elder Line, and Brunswick-Luneburg, Younger Line, the former of which was represented in the Ducal House of Brunswick, while the latter, which included Hanover in its possessions, is merged in the British royal family. After many changes, the Elder Line became Brunswick-Wolfenbuttel, and the Younger Line Brunswick-Luneberg, or Brunswick-Hanover. If the Duke's claim were allowed, the Younger Line would become the reigning family, the elder being extinct.

The diet of the Duchy of Brunswick has adopted the proposition made by the council of state that if the Duke does not ally himself with Prussia within three months the diet shall proceed to elect a sovereign from the collateral lines.

QUEEN'S DOLL AND CRADLE.

Favorite Toys of Girlhood Days of Alexandra.

London.—Here is a picture of the doll and its cradle that were the favorite toys of Queen Alexandra of Great Britain when she was a little girl. They have been treasured by her through all the years, and quite recently she presented them to a London museum.

At the time the present queen of England delighted in rocking her quaint little baby doll to sleep in its equally quaint cradle she was the daughter of the duke of Schleswig-Helstein-Sonderburg-Glucksburg. The duke, in expectation of the crown of Denmark, gave drawing lessons to increase his modest income.

His daughters were brought up quite strictly. They were made to learn diligently. They had to cut out and sew their own toilets. For this purpose each of them received about $3 a month, which sufficed to dress them from head to foot.

And the three little German girls were marvelously pretty in their simple, thin cotton frocks. Only the boots wore out far too soon, which was a source of great trouble to Alexandra, who was always dancing and jumping about.

New Island.

Fishermen report from Seward, Alaska, that a new island has been formed in Bering Sea by a submarine eruption. They say that vast quantities of rock were thrown up which form a series of rugged headlands; that the waters of the sea were very warm near the island and the air so hot that they were unable to approach nearer than to get a long sight of it.

Good Advice to Boys.

First-class dairy goods, first-class fruit and vegetables, first-class poultry and eggs, first-class farm stock—these are always in demand at the best prices. Be a first-class farmer.—American Cultivator.

THE SUNBEAM.

Entered as Second-class matter August 30, 1905, at the post office at Sunbeam Minn. under the Act of Congress of March 3, 1879.

Oklahoma went hurry-scurry Democratic; that party will write the constitution for the new state, and they did not have a Johnson to help them either.

We recived a letter of inquirey from the east the other day asking us if this state was a democratic state' or just a Johnson state. We answered; a Johnson state.

We have not heard the returns from Mississippi, one of strongest democratic states in the union, so we don't know which won out them or Minnesota, on the number of democratic votes cast at the last election.

The re election of Governor Johnson by an increased majority this year and the election of a republican state ticket, has again demonstrated the independance of the American voter. That John A. Johnson has made a fairly good governor there can no one deny, and his re-election by an increased majority, shows that the voters of Minnesota are of that opinion. The people have spoken at the ballot box and John A. Johnson is our governor for the next two years.

Jacobson is now the logical republican candidate two years from now for governor.—St. Hilaire Spectator.

That's right begin to line them up so thare will be about twelve logical canditiates by the time the next republican state Con vention meets, then one of them got the nomination, and the other eleven and all their friends turn in and help the democrats to beat the man that beat them. Then history will repeat its self.

We will give Thief River Falls credit for putting up a warm campaign for the election of county officers in this county, and by their united efforts winning out on all their candidates, except Stanton. They won out on the county seat removel issue, which worked to perfection, in fact we are of the opinion that some of the people up this way (when they hear they won out,) will go down there in a week or two and ask some of the policeman to direct them to the court house.

Not A Test Vote.

Those that are of the opinion that the vote for County officers at last weeks election, was a test vote on the removel of the county seat in this county, from Red Lake, to Thief River Falls, are liable to find they are badly mistaken in the sizeing up of the sit uation; when the county seat removel comes before the voters.

Of all rediculas ideas that we ever saw brought into any campaign, this was the worst, that you could not vote for your choice for a county officer without being accused of voting on a county seat fight The election of county officers in this county had no more to do with the county seat removel than the election of the governor of this state. So just keep cool gentlemen, until the real county seat fight comes before the voters and you will find we are correct in our statement.

Our County Officers.

The above will serve the County as our officials for the next two years. They are a pretty good lot of fellows, (after election is over) and are all well qualified for their positons, and the Countys records will be well taken care of.

Trouble For Government Clerks.

"Congress makes lots of unnecessary trouble for the government clerks," said a veteran employee, "but the worst case I know of occurred some years ago. A certain senator asked the comptroller of the currency to tell him how much stock a certain man had in a national bank. He was informed that such information was regarded as confidential and could not be given out."

"We'll see about that," said the senator, who was plainly disappointed and displeased.

"Several days later he secured the passage of a resolution calling upon the secretary of the treasury to furnish the senate with the names and holdings of the stockholders in all the national banks in the country. He really wanted to know only the interest of one man in a bank, but he knew that he couldn't get a resolution of that kind through the senate, so he included the stockholders in all national banks. It took the entire force of the comptroller's office several weeks to prepare the information, and when it reached the senate nobody paid any attention to it except the author of the resolution, and he merely looked at the mass of papers only long enough to see about the man he was after and then tossed the papers aside. It was an immense lot of work for nothing."—Washington Star.

The Abbe's Criticism.

An American lady residing in Rome presented to a friend, who is an abbe, an intellectual man and familiar with English, although no traveler, a copy of one of Mary Wilkins' New England stories.

"The author of this, my dear friend," she said, "is the best portrayer of New England character we have. No other writer has caught so well the charm of the place and the people. I hope you will like it."

The abbe took the book and thanked her. In a few days he came again and returned it gingerly, saying a word or two of thanks.

"Were you not pleased with the quaint portrayal of the life?" asked the lady.

"You say this is a faithful portrayal of life in New England?"

"Very faithful indeed."

The abbe sighed and said, with deep sympathy, "How sad!"—Reader Magazine.

The Curse of Shiftlessness.

Whether shiftlessness is a vice that is incurable or a habit that can be overcome, it is anyhow a condition that perplexes and irritates relieving officials. Shiftlessness is paying one's last 50 cents for a circus ticket without learning where tomorrow's breakfast is coming from. It is a refusal to repair the leak in the roof when the sun shines. It is killing the goose that lays the golden eggs. It takes no thought of the morrow. It never lays up anything for a rainy day. It always ignores opportunities. It prefers to rely on neighborhood bounty to hustling for itself. It won't work, except under the pressure of necessity. It never gets ahead.—Hartford Times.

Ideas From Nature.

Walking on the outskirts of Bolton one autumn evening, a clever young man became interested in watching the seeds falling from a sycamore tree. He observed that they acquired a rotary motion before reaching the ground, and, inquiring into the cause, he found that the two wings were slightly turned in opposite directions, which caused them to revolve in falling. The idea of making a screw propeller on this principle at once occurred to him.

Galvani, a natural philosopher of Italy, was dissecting a dead frog one day while a pupil was making experiments in electricity by his side. He observed that the muscles of the frog, being exposed, gave signs of motion whenever the nerves came in contact with the scopel. Galvani discovered the existence of a new principle in this phenomenon and originated the fertile branch of physics known by the name of galvanism.

Lynch Law.

In an article in Law Notes on "The Origin of the Term 'Lynch Law'" mention was made of the fact that formerly the term "Lydford law" was used in the same sense in England. A North Carolina judge in a recent case quoted the following lines:

I oft have heard of Lydford law—
How in the morn they hang and draw
And sit in judgment after.

They seem to show the existence of a similar summary punishment in England.

Unconscious Sarcasm.

A Scotch visitor to the Carlyles, in Cheyne row, was much struck with the sound proof room which the sage had contrived for himself in the attic, lighted from the top, and where no sight or sound from outside could penetrate. "My certes, this is fine!" cried the old friend, with unconscious sarcasm. "Here ye may write and study all the rest of your life and no human being be one bit the wiser."

A Little Misunderstanding.

"Sir, your son's performance on the French horn is execrable. It will drive everybody from my house. You told me he was a teacher."

"I did not. I said he was a tooter."

Men are often capable of greater things than they perform. They are sent into the world with bills of credit and seldom draw to their full extent.—[illegible]

Luxury in Bottles.

One of the many little signs of the growing luxury of the times is to be seen in the drug stores nowadays where there is kept in stock a supply of bottles for the ordinary run of household remedies with cut glass stoppers and the names of the drugs either ground on the glass or having a regular druggist's label of gilt on a white ground. These bottles are fairly expensive, for ones of pint size cost about a dollar, and from that figure they run down to 50 cents. It is another sign of the times that one of the regular labels kept in stock on these bottles is "peroxide."—New York Press.

Modest Oyama.

Self depreciation seems to be a common virtue of military heroes in Japan. In his parting address to his officers on the breaking up of the Manchurian army Marshal Oyama says, "That I, in spite of my defective ability, have been enabled to avoid any signal failure must be primarily ascribed to the loyalty and fidelity of the officers and soldiers under my command." Surely modesty could go no farther.

The House of Commons.

It was customary at one time when any important measure was under discussion to call the names of all members of the house of commons, with a view to securing a full attendance. Although a motion has been made for it, however, a call of the house has not been known since 1836, and consequently the custom has fallen into desuetude.

The English Police.

In the conduct of the police department in an English city we find a striking comparison with our American notion of police work. In Manchester, as in London, the policeman is always the servant of the public. As in London, he carries neither club nor revolver. His duties are very nearly the same as those of a New York officer. It is in his method of doing his work that the striking difference lies. He is always quiet, always neat, always respectful, even deferential, in his treatment of the public. Such overbearing manners as we sometimes see in New York policemen would not be tolerated in Manchester—or in London, for that matter.—Success.

Origin of "Chauffeur."

There were chauffeurs long before automobiles. History tells us that about the year 1795 men strangely accoutered, their faces covered with soot and their eyes carefully disguised, entered by night farms and lonely habitations and committed all sorts of depredations. They garroted their victims, dragged them before a great fire, where they burned the soles of their feet and demanded information as to the whereabouts of their money and jewels; hence they were called "chauffeurs," a name which frightened so much our good grandmothers.—Paris Figaro.

Child Love.

Welcome to the parents the puny struggler, strong in his weakness, his little arms more irresistible than the soldier's, his lips touched with persuasion which Chatham and Pericles in manhood had not. His unaffected lamentations when he lifts up his voice on high, or, more beautiful, the sobbing child, the face all liquid grief, as he tries to swallow his vexation, soften all hearts to pity and to mirthful and clamorous compassion.—Emerson.

Merely a Precaution.

"Now, Lester," said the old codger, addressing his callow nephew in an admonitory tone, "it is as proper that you should pay the fiddler as it is to liquidate any other debt, but it's a fine exhibition of extry width betwixt the eyes to inquire the fiddler's price before the dance begins."—Puck.

Use your gifts faithfully and they shall be enlarged. Practice what you know and you shall attain to higher knowledge.—Arnold.

A man who covers himself with costly apparel and neglects his mind is like one who illuminates the outside of his house and sits within in the dark.

FOR THE LITTLE ONES.

Ready Wit Is an Advantage In This Jolly Game.

"What is my thought like?" is a good game, even if it is not particularly new.

Begin by asking each player in turn, "What is my thought like?" to which he must answer the first thing that comes to his mind, but it must be different from the answer given by the others.

You must keep a list of all the answers, and then, having announced what your thought really was, ask each player to tell you in what way your thought resembles the thing he gave in his answer.

For instance:

You ask, "What is my thought like?"

No. 1 replies, "Like a stove."

No. 2 replies, "Like a book," etc.

You then announce: "My thought was myself. Now, how am I like a stove?"

No. 1 replies, "Because you often go out."

You ask No. 2, "How am I like a book?"

No. 2 replies, "Because you are well read," etc.

This game is great fun.

What Is a Handkerchief?

The word "handkerchief" is a very queer one. A "kerchief" is a covering for the head, being made up of the words "cur," to cover, and "chef," the head. A handkerchief therefore is a covering for the head carried in the hand. A pocket handkerchief is still more inconsistent, for that word really means a head covering carried in the hand and kept in the pocket at the same time. There are lots of such inconsistencies in our language, and it is not to be wondered at that foreigners find it very hard to master.

Nonsense Rhyme.

Why not have a nonsense rhyme game some day? Give four players sheets of paper and pencils and offer a prize for the best nonsense rhyme composed in so many minutes.

You know how they go, as, for instance:

There was a young man of Bridgeport,
Who sat on the stove just for sport,
And, though he was burned,
No lesson he learned,
This eccentric young man from Bridgeport.

Nobody Was There.

To take the census of the British empire is a matter of difficulty in certain districts. A native official was ordered to take a census of what was known to be a populous village in Uganda. He returned with the report that there was no population, the explanation being that the inhabitants had fled on hearing of his approach. More precise instructions were given to him, and he paid another visit to the village. The result of his inquiry was given thus in the tabulated form: Number of huts, 257; inhabitants, men over eighteen years of age, 0; men under eighteen years of age, 0; women, 0; children, 0; total, 0.

Hearses After Night.

There is one kind of vehicle that neither the oldest nor the youngest inhabitant has seen on the street at night, or, if he has seen it at all, only infrequently. That is a hearse. Every other kind of conveyance used by modern man is driven about the streets freely after nightfall—the hearse alone comes under the curfew law. Early hours seem to be imposed upon that somber carriage by common consent. The public doesn't like to see it after dark, and coachmen don't like to drive it. No doubt there are hearses that are compelled by the exigencies of funeral arrangements to come home at unseasonable hours, but when forced to an infringement of the unwritten law they proceed through quiet streets where they will be least likely to wound the sensibilities of the superstitious.—New York Herald.

The Small Mouthed Bass.

The small mouthed bass fully deserves his reputation for being vigorous and gamy from infancy. He is extremely pugnacious by nature and has fighting tactics peculiarly his own which for strength, activity and craft are unequaled. I once took a bass four inches long on a spoon hook, the bowl of which was more than two inches long. This bass does not hesitate to tackle that terror of all other fish—the fierce and voracious pickerel. With his first dorsal fin rigidly set up, he lays off some ten or twenty feet and then makes a rapid dash right into and under the "long face," forcing him to clear out at once or ripping him so badly that he is hors de combat. The fact has been established that bass introduced into a pond containing pickerel will ultimately destroy the latter. The same fate awaits other fish, including trout.—Outing.

Wind Superstitions.

The Finns of Norway long entertained a traditional belief in the power of controlling the winds by a small rope with three knots tied in it. This popular superstition gave rise to the curious industry of making and selling these wind controlling ropes with magical knots to mariners and fishermen. It was believed that by unloosing the first knot a favorable breeze was secured, the second raised a strong gale and if the third knot was untied it would prove the prelude to a tempest. According to Ranulph Higden, the witches of the Isle of Man had a similar ancient practice of selling winds to sailors.

Apt.

Douglas Jerrold had a way of putting pat names to things. One of his remarks is given by George Hodder in "Manners of My Time." Jerrold was at a party one night where a doctor, who was tall and thin almost to emaciation, had for a partner a lady who was short and square in build. Turning to a bystander, he remarked, "There is a mile dancing with a milestone."

When Labor Did Not Tell.

A home missionary who visited Sing Sing prison took occasion to have a heart to heart talk with one of the convicts.

"Don't you know, my friend," said he, "that crime never brings success? It is only achieved by hard labor."

"I did six months of it at a stretch once, and I didn't come out no richer than I went in."

He Was Spurned.

"Believe me," said old Gofrox, "although I'm an old bachelor I'm sure I could learn to be a good husband. You know, a man is never too old to learn."

"Nor too old to yearn, perhaps," replied Miss Pechis; "also I'm sorry to say you're not too old to spurn."—Philadelphia Press.

Always Something Lacking.

Love is like a waltz. It never quite fulfills all one expects of it. Either the man's lead is too fast or too slow, his hold too light or too loose, he stumbles over your gown or steps on your feet, and if everything else is right it is the wrong man.—Life

For Its Vocabulary's Sake.

"'Mary, come and take the parrot out of the bedroom at once. The master has lost his collar button.'"

STEVE'S INVESTMENT

By William Hamilton Osborne

(Copyright, 1906, by Joseph B. Bowles.)

Young Lorimer stepped down the narrow lane and entered upon the box-wood path. The house was dark save for one room. Lorimer entered this lighted parlor, extending his hand toward a girl, who rose cordially, but a bit indifferently, to meet him.

Lorimer was a fine looking chap, with a good nose, a good chin and straight eyebrows—perhaps a bit too serious in appearance. Nervously seizing both of the girl's hands, he drew her gently toward him, releasing her as he did so.

"Kitty!" he exclaimed, with a queer catch in his voice, "I—I—I have something to say to you." He stopped and laughed in an embarrassed sort of way. Then he went on, faster than before.

"Kitty, my—house, the little house upon the hill—you know about it! It will be finished in the fall. I—I want you to come and be its mistress, Kitty. I went to look at it to-night. The work is progressing. We—we can live there, you and I, Kitty, and be so happy!"

He stopped and fumbled for an instant in a pocket, from whence he drew forth a small, white packet.

"See what I've brought you, sweetheart," he whispered. "I dared, because I felt so sure—I knew that—"

The girl toyed with the ring for a moment; then, with a faint cry, sprang to her feet.

"No, no, no!" she said, excitedly. "I can't take it. Steve—you—say you didn't mean it. I can't marry you. I fear I don't love you enough. I—no, don't ask me why! I can't do it, that's all. I thought you understood—I can't do it, that's all!"

Stephen Lorimer stood stupidly erect, twirling on the smallest finger of his hand the ring which she had returned to him.

"Do you really mean this, Kitty?" he asked, at length. "Is it all over?"

"You've been a good friend to me, Steve," she answered simply, and not unpleasantly. "I've thought it over. I can't change it."

Lorimer looked keenly at her. He was satisfied that she meant what she said. He was well assured of it, in fact.

Ten minutes later he walked out into the darkness, knowing not whither he was going, and caring less.

Next day Lorimer met a selectman of the town.

"Steve Lorimer," said the man, with some clumsy attempt at playfulness, "if either you or J. T. O. Underwood don't marry Judge Pollard's girl, and that right away. I'm blamed if I don't step in and cut you both out—so get a move on you!"

"J. T. O. Underwood," muttered Lorimer to himself, as he went along, "so that's it, is it? I didn't know—I didn't know."

A few months later Underwood, newly married, addressed his young wife.

"Kitty," he said, "Steve Lorimer's going to leave town. They've made him superintendent at Monroe, a hundred miles down the road. I saw him this morning

Men who go away as Lorimer went, and who at the new scene of operations find their constant presence very necessary, go back but seldom to the old place. Lorimer had no family—he had himself, Stephen Lorimer, that was all.

In the course of three or four years he made a visit to the old place. He had had but little word from there in the meantime. It was many months since he had received a check for rent. He wanted to know, to see with his own eyes, how things were going. He went there.

Underwood, who met him, was not quite so dashing in appearance as formerly, although he was still neat. He had grown far bolder with his tongue. He was a bluffer. A slight boom had started at one end of the little town, and some new houses had gone up. Underwood claimed the credit for this boom. But the boom had stopped at Underwood's door. With all his braggadocio he was poor—almost as poor as a man can be. And Kitty—she was more beautiful than ever, in spite of the two little lines that appeared in her youthful forehead.

After dinner, Underwood, man of schemes, procured from some place, on credit, an old livery rig. He drove Lorimer about the place for an hour.

Underwood showed him a tract of land that was a bargain. It could be bought cheap; it was worth its weight in gold. Lorimer knew it—in fact it belonged to Kitty, and he knew every inch of it.. But all through the recital he understood one thing, and that was that Underwood wanted $5,000. It began there, but it did not end there. He saw another thing—that was that Kitty needed the $5,000. This was something he could not get out of his head. Kitty was poor, terribly poor. She needed money—$5,000. He knew well that Kitty didn't know the object of this livery excursion, but he knew too well the necessity for it.

He left Underwood at the station and boarded his train, promising the man that he would think the matter over. He did so coldly, but politely. Underwood saw it was no go; that he had not really convinced Stephen.

Stephen Lorimer had $5,000. He recalled what he had intended to do with it. He knew just where that five—all that he owned, except the little house—just where that five could be placed in order to multiply into twenty, forty, sixty, perhaps a hundred thousand dollars. He, and few besides him, knew the possibilities of the M. K. & P. R. R. Co.

Reaching Monroe he went to the bank and drew his check for $5,000, leaving but a few dollars balance. He was a fool, and he knew it. But Kitty was starving, and they needed money.

Lorimer was a plodder; so he plodded and held his place. It was a fair position; he was a valuable man; but the concern was conservative, and it did not overpay him. By the time he accumulated a few thousand, M. K. & P., by reason of a favorable merger, went to its highest point. His friends sold out and one of them retired.

"If you'd only had five thousand a few years ago, Steve!" one exclaimed.

"If I only had," Steve nodded in assent.

One day, back in the little village, a man died. He did not die obscurely. He was a comparatively young man, and had been a very successful one. The name of this man was John T. Ogden Underwood. He was the richest man in the town. He left a fortune, most of it in stocks and bonds. His holdings in M. K. & P. were large. He left his young widow a handsome competence—his life had been a great success.

A long time after this, Stephen Lorimer, understanding but little of the truth, went back to the small village. He called on Mrs. Underwood.

"When you were here last," she said to him, "Ogden took you for a drive, I remember. I shall do so this time." In a far different equipage now they went, and alone, for Mrs. Underwood herself preferred to drive.

Lorimer actually rubbed his eyes. "Why, I hardly know the place," he said, "on account of the improvements. What a difference!"

"You see," said Mrs. Underwood, "the advance went all the other way. Your little house on the hill is the only one in that section, and it is tenantless. I had a few acres near it you know. which father left me. But they are not worth a cent more than they were ten years ago. Everything went the other way."

"I—Loved—You—Ever—Since That Night."

"You still own your acres?" Lorimer couldn't resist asking the question.

"Oh, no!" she said. "Ogden sold them years ago to some man. He was a foolish buyer."

Lorimer smiled, assenting. "Yes, indeed, he was. Mr. Underwood was very successful," he added.

They had just reached the little house—Lorimer's little house.

"It seems years since I built this place," said Lorimer. "Years!"

"It is years," Mrs. Underwood replied.

Suddenly Lorimer, still a strong young man despite his years of hard work and quiet life, looked Mrs. Underwood full in the face. "It is years!" his deep voice echoed.

"Kitty," said Lorimer, "I—I can't forget—no, please don't stop me yet—I can't forget just why I built this place. I can't forget the long, long time I worked for it and planned for it—I can't forget the happiness to which I looked forward. To think, Kitty, that you and I, and no one else, could have lived in this little house and been happy—yes, happy—"

Mrs. Underwood stepped toward him, with a little cry. "Steve, Steve!" she exclaimed, "don't, don't recall the past. Think of—"

Stephen Lorimer looked into the glowing eyes of this beautiful young woman; what he saw there filled him with hope, and made him grateful.

"Then you do—" he ventured, and paused.

She bowed her head. "I—loved—you—ever since—that night—but you never—came again." Stephen Lorimer caught her in his arms. "Kitty, Kitty!" he exclaimed, "say that again—say it again—"

"It was I," the young woman confessed, "who made a mistake. I—I would rather have been poor with you during all these years, than—"

Stephen Lorimer stooped and kissed her, not once or twice or thrice, but many times.

"Poor with me!" Then he thought of the $5,000 and the M. K. & P. investment that he missed.

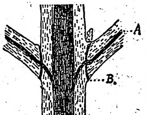
"She shall never know," he whispered to himself.

HORTICULTURE

FALLING LEAVES.

The Scientific Reason for Their Dropping from Trees.

If we ask why leaves fall, it may be difficult to find a complete answer, but some of the advantages to the tree are apparent. The most rigorous season of the year is the winter, and at this time most of our trees are without leaves. Leaves are the most delicate parts of the tree and are poorly fitted to withstand the severity of northern winters, although we may notice the reduced size and firmer structure of those of the conifers which remain on the trees during cold weather. The absence of leaves makes the trees less exposed to being overturned or broken by the fierce blasts of the winter's winds, but probably the greatest advantage to the tree is the very much smaller surface for the evaporation of water. During cold weather all plants absorb water very slowly and probably the greatest danger the tree has to meet during the winter is that more water will be lost by evaporation and transpiration than can be supplied by absorption. Then the vital process of food manufacture is almost entirely stopped by cold weather and hence the work of the leaves may be said to be done as the autumn temperature lowers.



LEAVES BEING CUT OFF.

Section of a Horse-chestnut Twig Enlarged.

The process by which leaves are removed from the trees is an interesting one, although they are neither pushed off by the newly-formed buds nor loosened by the frost. In order to understand this process, it is necessary to examine the structure of the petiole where it joins the twig. The horse-chestnut shows the various parts very plainly. The central portion of the twig is a cylinder of woody fibre, which, during the life of the tree, conveys the prepared food in a downward passage, the outer portion or fibres of the bark conducting the sap in its upward flow. One or more strands of woody conducting fibre passes out into the petiole of each leaf (A). As the season advances and preparatory to the falling of the leaves a layer of thin-walled cells forms at the base of the petiole (B). These cells are very similar to the cork cells found in the bark of the tree and check the passage of all fluids except through the central strand of fibres. Through this central strand most of the prepared food passes from the leaf to the tree, there to be used in growth or stored for anonther season, leaving in the leaf only useless waste products. As the cutting off layer is completed many of the cells in the center break down and nothing holds the leaf in place excepting the fibres of the central strand, then a light breeze or even the weight of the leaf is enough to snap this slender thread and the leaf flutters to the ground. The cells which cut off the leaf now form a protecting layer excluding all moisture from the twig.

Trees vary greatly with respect to the formation of this cutting off layer, says the Montreal Herald; in some like the horse-chestnut it is thick and corky, being easily seen by the naked eye, in the ash, butternut and many others it is well devoped, while in some like the beech it is scarcely present at all.

The lawn should be always kept in perfect condition.

Who has ever been able to use the surplus strawberries for vinegar or jam at a profit?

A hot solution of lye will kill peach borers. Not "hot air," though they are often the same!

All the sorting that apples require ought to be done when they are gathered, and if it is propertly done there will be almost no risk at all in the matter of keeping.

There are two circumstances in favor of fall pruning of grape vines. There is little danger of bleeding and the work being done cannot be procrastinated in spring until too late, as is often done.

Little pruning need be done the first year if trees have been properly pruned when set. Cut off dead shoots and, later in the season, should rank growing shoots develop at places not needed, remove them or head them in.

Manure Bushes in Fall.

For best results currant bushes should be well manured in the fall and the manure plowed in so that the injured rootlets may have time during the winter months to replenish themselves. Plow quite shallow next to the bushes. Give shallow cultivation early in spring and at intervals during the summer.

There is more Catarrh in this section of the country than all other diseases put together, and until the last few years was supposed to be incurable. For a great many years doctors pronounced it a local disease and prescribed local remedies, and by constantly failing to cure with local treatment, pronounced it incurable. Science has proven Catarrh to be a constitutional disease, and therefore requires constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, Ohio, is the only Constitutional cure on the market. It is taken internally in doses from 10 drops to a teaspoonful. It acts directly on the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. They offer one hundred dollars for any case it fails to cure. Send for circulars and testimonials.

Income From Abroad.

The London Economist states that British capitalists draw an income of $500,000,000 from their foreign investments. Last fiscal year they paid income tax on $330,300,000, as compared with $195,100,000 20 years ago. The largest amount is derived from interest on foreign and colonial government securities and the next largest sum from dividends and interest from foreign and colonial concerns.

Parisian Meat Supply.

The last year for which complete statistics concerning the meat supply of Paris have been published is 1903. From the reports of that year it appears that 267,027 cattle, 274,390 calves and 2,047,770 sheep were slaughtered at the city abattoirs and produced 156,007,850 kilograms (or 327,616,485 pounds) of meat, of which 123,712,180 kilograms (259,795,578 pounds) were consumed in Paris, and 32,292,650 kilograms exported. Some of the choicest of French beef goes to England, where the fillets and other prime cuts are in demand for clubs, hotels, and the best class of restaurants. During the same year there were killed 282,508 hogs, which yielded 27,657,350 kilograms (58,080,435 pounds of pork, and 29,370 horses, which furnished 7,305,650 kilograms (or 15,341,865 pounds) of meat, all of which was consumed in Paris.

THE LAXATIVE OF KNOWN QUALITY

There are two classes of remedies; those of known quality and which are permanently beneficial in effect, acting gently, in harmony with nature, when nature needs assistance; and another class, composed of preparations of unknown, uncertain and inferior character, acting temporarily, but injuriously, as a result of forcing the natural functions unnecessarily. One of the most exceptional of the remedies of known quality and excellence is the ever pleasant Syrup of Figs, manufactured by the California Fig Syrup Co., which represents the active principles of plants, known to act most beneficially, in a pleasant syrup, in which the wholesome Californian blue figs are used to contribute their rich, yet delicate, fruity flavor. It is the remedy of all remedies to sweeten and refresh and cleanse the system gently and naturally, and to assist one in overcoming constipation and the many ills resulting therefrom. Its active principles and quality are known to physicians generally, and the remedy has therefore met with their approval, as well as with the favor of many millions of well informed persons who know of their own personal knowledge and from actual experience that it is a most excellent laxative remedy. We do not claim that it will cure all manner of ills, but recommend it for what it really represents, a laxative remedy of known quality and excellence, containing nothing of an objectionable or injurious character.

There are two classes of purchasers; those who are informed as to the quality of what they buy and the reasons for the excellence of articles of exceptional merit, and who do not lack courage to go elsewhere when a dealer offers an imitation of any well known article; but, unfortunately, there are some people who do not know, and who allow themselves to be imposed upon. They cannot expect its beneficial effects if they do not get the genuine remedy.

To the credit of the druggists of the United States be it said that nearly all of them value their reputation for professional integrity and the good will of their customers too highly to offer imitations of the

Dyspepsia of Women

Caused by Female Disorders and Cured by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

A great many women suffer with a form of indigestion or dyspepsia which does not seem to yield to ordinary treatment. While the symptoms seem to be similar to those of ordinary indigestion, yet the medicines universally prescribed do not seem to restore the patient's normal condition.

Mrs. M. Wright

Mrs. Pinkham claims that there is a kind of dyspepsia that is caused by a derangement of the female organism, and which, while it causes a disturbance similar to ordinary indigestion, cannot be relieved without a medicine which not only acts as a stomach tonic, but has a peculiar tonic effect on the female organism.

As proof of this theory we call attention to the case of Mrs. Maggie Wright, Brooklyn, N. Y., who was completely cured by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound after everything else had failed. She writes:

"For two years I suffered with dyspepsia which so degenerated the entire system that I was unable to attend to my daily duties. I felt weak and nervous, and nothing that I ate tasted good and it caused a disturbance in my stomach. I tried different dyspepsia cures, but nothing seemed to help me. I was advised to give Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound a trial, and was happily surprised to find that it acted like a fine tonic, and in a few days I began to enjoy and properly digest my food. My recovery was rapid, and in five weeks I was a well woman. I have recommended it to many suffering women."

No other medicine in the world has received such widespread and unqualified endorsement or has such a record of cures of female troubles, as has Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Attendance at Liepsic Fair.

At the Leipsic fall fair of 1906, the number of firms represented as buyers was 9,886, as against 9,105 in 1905 and 7,534 in 1903; an increase of over 31 per cent during the last three years. The United States and Canada were represented by 114 buyers, while Latin America, Asia and Europe were also well represented. The official list of sellers this year shows that 3,275 firms had exhibits, as against 3,101 in 1905. The countries represented, and the number of firms from each, were as follows: German empire, 2,961; Austria-Hungary, 228; France, 40; Great Britain, 13; Netherlands, 13; Switzerland, 6; Italy, 5; Belgium, 4; Denmark, 2; Sweden, 2, and the United States, 1.

When Is an Old Maid?

When does a girl become an old maid? This question, blunt and shorn of delicate innuendo, is now figuring in the somnolent discussion of Philadelphia society. One might say that a girl becomes an old maid when she fails to marry betimes, but that is not the point. What is the exact year that ushers in spinsterhood and closes forever the gates of youth? Of course, this is not a matter in which man has any word to say. No rational wearer of trousers would tempt fate and the scorn of femininity by attempting a suggestion, for any arbitrary dead line would necessarily bring down upon the luckless masculine head a storm of reprobation. It has been left to the women themselves to brave the peril. And they have placed the age at 40 years. Under this ruling a woman is a tender bud until twoscore years have counted their gloomy litany of days and the hair near the scalp begins to whiten.

IT'S THE FOOD.

The True Way to Correct Nervous Troubles.

Nervous troubles are more often caused by improper food and indigestion than most people imagine. Even doctors sometimes overlook this fact. A man says:

"Until two years ago waffles and butter with meat and gravy were the main features of my breakfast. Finally dyspepsia came on and I found myself in a bad condition, worse in the morning than any other time. I would have a full, sick feeling in my stomach, with pains in my heart, sides and head.

"At times I would have no appetite for days, then I would feel ravenous, never satisfied when I did eat and so nervous I felt like shrieking at the top of my voice. I lost flesh badly and hardly knew which way to turn until one day I bought a box of Grape-Nuts food to see if I could eat that. I tried it without telling the doctor, and liked it fine; made me feel as if I had something to eat that was satisfying and still I didn't have that heaviness that I had felt after eating any other food.

"I hadn't drank any coffee then in five weeks. I kept on with the Grape-Nuts and in a month and a half I had gained 15 pounds, could eat almost anything I wanted, didn't feel badly after eating and my nervousness was all gone. It's a pleasure to be well again."

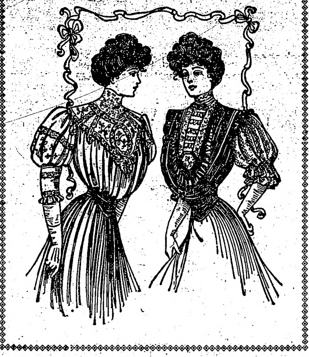
Pretty Silk Waists.



The blouse at the left is of green silk, with yoke or plastron of embroidery, incrusted with heavy guipure. The little guimpe is of valenciennes lace.

The sleeves form puffs at the top with deep cuffs extending just below the elbows. They are trimmed with the embroidery and guipure.

The other waist is of violet taffeta prettily draped over a plastron of silk gauze of a much paler shade, which is trimmed with little ruffles of the same and bordered with a wide band of guipure.

The edge of the blouse itself, bordering the plastron, is finished with a band of the taffeta or of velvet to match and a little plaiting of the silk. It forms frills over the sleeves, which are of lace, over the pale violet gauze.

Dainty Refreshments for Five O'clock Teas.

Courses Not in Order at These Delightful Informal Entertainments —Ideas for "Big Baby" Party.

Will Madame Merri please give four courses for a five o'clock tea; also the proper method of serving the same? and greatly oblige,

"AN INTERESTED READER."

A "five o'clock tea" is the very simplest of entertainments, and courses are never served. The hour is too near dinner time to permit of anything heavy in the way of eatables. Dainty sandwiches, wafers, nuts, bonbons, candies, ginger and fruit glaces are all adjuncts of the afternoon tea table. Generally the choice of two beverages is given, tea, with its various accompaniments of lemon, arrak, rum and fruit juices; coffee or chocolate, the latter always with whipped cream. Sometimes a frappe or sherbert is served, or an iced drink if the weather is very warm. In winter it has been rather popular to have a cup of piping hot bouillon to warm those coming in from the frosty air. The refreshments are to promote sociability and not cloy the appetite so that the next meal will not be an impossibility. Up to date we have not achieved the capacity of our English cousins, who consume many and heavy meals at short intervals. It is usual for an intimate friend or two to preside at the tea or coffee urn and assist the hostess in receiving those who call. A visiting card with "at home" from 3 to 5 is the medium for letting one's friends know that you will be glad to see them informally.

"Big" Baby Parties.

Kindly tell me in your department how to send invitations for a grown people's "baby" party; how shall I word them, what games shall we play, and what for refreshments and favors? Also should the hostess be dressed as a "baby?" "A. B. C."

Use the invitation paper that stationers have for children's parties, write the first names of the guests, and at the bottom of the page say: "Please come dressed like a child not over ten years of age." For a party of this description do not ask over 15 or 20 guests; they should all be well acquainted and thoroughly congenial, so that there will be no formality. The hostess at a recent party was dressed exactly like a three-months-old baby, with a dainty bonnet, long dress, little flannel shoulder shawl, leather moccasins and a rattle in her hands. She also had one of those abominations known as a "comforter" on a pink ribbon tied to her wrist. On one finger she wore a ring tied on. Play the games children love, sing kindergarten songs, borrow a lot of dolls and all sorts of toys, marbles, jack stones, tops, etc. In fact, go back into the shadowy realms and renew your youth; it will do every one of you untold good.

Have low tables and kindergarten chairs for serving the refreshments, sandwiches, animal crackers, milk, cocoa, ice cream, stick candy, etc., not forgetting snapping cracker caps. For favors you have only to go to the toy department, and the only trouble you will have is what not to buy. In Japanese goods you will find many inexpensive things, paper balls, caps, masks, fans, puzzles, etc.

"Baby's Book" Is a New and Pretty Idea.

In It Is Kept Record of the Interesting Happenings of Infancy and Childhood.

An idea which was much appreciated by mothers in a book called "Baby's Souvenir," and it is really so pretty that the young mother who is not quite able to afford the original could imitate the idea in a modified way. "Baby's Book" is the record of his or her doings from birth to—say —the teens.

A nice, leather-bound, clasped, blank-paged book should be brought; in this, as the first entry, is baby's birthday, the date and place, then comes the christening, the name of the church, the date, the signature of the godparents, and, if possible, small, unmounted photographs of baby, father, mother, grandparents and godparents should be pasted on to the "christening" leaf.

There should be records of the first tooth, the first attempts to walk, illnesses, in fact the interesting happenings of the little one's life, and it would add to the success of "Baby's Book" if photographs of the owner were inserted at intervals. As time went on, and the baby emerged from infancy to childhood, the record would be varied until, the "teens" reached, "Baby's Book" would be "Baby's Book" no longer.

RUNNING SORES ON LIMBS.

Little Girl's Obstinate Case of Eczema —Mother Says: "Cuticura Remedies a Household Standby."

"Last year, after having my little girl treated by a very prominent physician, for an obstinate case of eczema, I resorted to the Cuticura Remedies, and was so well pleased with the almost instantaneous relief afforded that we discarded the physician's prescription and relied entirely on the Cuticura Soap, Cuticura Ointment, and Cuticura Pills. When we commenced with the Cuticura Remedies her feet and limbs were covered with running sores. In about six weeks, we had her completely well, and there has been no recurrence of the trouble. We find that the Cuticura Remedies are a valuable household standby, living as we do, twelve miles from a doctor, and where it costs from twenty to twenty-five dollars to come up on the mountain. FISH IN NEW PLACES.

Wild Ducks Found to Bear Fish Eggs Ready to Hatch.

A correspondent from Saffi wrote in our June issue expressing his mystification as to how small fish come to be in inclosed waters. A naturalist suggests an explanation. He says:

"If the wild ducks, etc., of Morocco are similar to those elsewhere there is no mystery. For some years there was open-mouthed wonder as to how perch, bream and crayfish could get into newly cut dams near the Macquarie river in New South Wales.

"In some cases the water had hardly settled after the rain had filled the dam than the fish were observed, and the farmers started a large theory of spontaneous production.

"This obtained till a Sydney professor chanced to pick up a wild duck and found its breast feathers and webbed feet well dotted with fertile and almost hatched fish-ova, on which the 'spontaneous production' theory was promptly withdrawn."—Chambers' Journal.

Marion Harland.

The celebrated authoress, so highly esteemed by the women of America, says on pages 103 and 445 of her book, "Eve's Daughters; or, Common Sense for Maid, Wife and Mother":

"For the aching back—should it be slow in recovering its normal strength —an Allcock's Plaster is an excellent comforter, combining the sensation of the sustained pressure of a strong warm hand with certain tonic qualities developed in the wearing. It should be kept over the seat of uneasiness for several days—in obstinate cases, for perhaps a fortnight."

"For pain in the back wear an Allcock's Plaster constantly, renewing as it wears off. This is an invaluable support when the weight on the small of the back becomes heavy and the aching incessant."

Earnings of Novelists.

Authors earn much less in France than in England. The late Sir Walter Besant ten years ago estimated that there were 50 novelists in England who earned upward of a thousand a year. There are now probably nearer a hundred and fifty; while in France there are almost certainly not more than 50 who make a living at all. An English novelist of standing will receive eighteenpence on every copy of a book sold. Some novelists receive two shillings. Emile Zola, who touched high water mark in France, got a franc, which is rather less than tenpence. Seven pence halfpenny is considered excellent pay, and fourpence and fivepence are common.

Wouldn't Fit.

Some visitors from the north attended service at a colored church in Alabama and were much amused when the good old preacher referred to John I. and John II. as "John with one eye and John with two eyes!"

But when he gave out a hymn beginning "Purge Me with Hyssop," there was consternation in the choir and great fumbling around for a tune to fit the words. At last the leading chorister addressed the preacher: "Say, Brother Johnsing, won't you please try some odder yarb?"—Lippincott's.

THE INVENTIONS OF HAWKINS

By EDGAR FRANKLIN

HAWKINSITE, THE NEW EXPLOSIVE

In the country, social intercourse between Hawkins' family and my own is upon the most informal basis. If it pleases us to dine together coatless and cuffless, we do so; and no one suggests that a national upheaval is likely to result.

But in town it is different. The bugaboo of strict propriety seems to take mysterious ascendency. We still dine together, but it is done in the most proper evening dress. It seems to be the law—unwritten but unalterable—that Hawkins and I shall display upon our respective bosoms something like a square foot of starchy white linen.

I hardly know why I mention this matter of evening clothes, unless it is that the memory of my brand-new dress suit, which passed to another sphere that night, still preys upon my mind.

That night, above mentioned, my wife and I dined in the Hawkins' home.

Hawkins seemed particularly jovial. He appeared to be chuckling with triumph, or some kindred emotion, and his air was even more expansive than usual.

When I mentioned the terrible explosion of the powder works at Pompton—hardly a subject to excite mirth in the normal individual—Hawkins fairly guffawed.

"But, Herbert," cried his wife, somewhat horrified, "is there anything humorous in the dismemberment of three poor workmen?"

"Oh, it isn't that—it isn't that, my dear," smiled the inventor. "It merely struck me as funny—this old notion of explosives."

"What old notion?" I inquired.

"Why, the fallacy of the present methods of manipulating nitro-glycerine."

"I presume you have a better scheme?" I advanced.

"Mr. Griggs," cried Hawkins' wife, in terror that was not all feigned, "don't suggest it!"

"Now, my dear—" began Hawkins, stiffening at once.

"Hush, Herbert, hush! You've made mischief enough with your inventions but you have never, thank goodness, dabbled in explosives."

"If I wanted to tell you what I know about explosives, and what I could do" declaimed Hawkins.

"Don't tell us, Mr. Hawkins," laughed my wife. "A sort of superstitious dread comes over me at the notion."

"Mrs. Griggs!" exclaimed Hawkins, eyeing my wife with a glare which in any other man would have earned him the best licking I could give him—but which, like many other things, had to be excused in Hawkins.

"Herbert!" said his wife, authoritatively. "Be still. Actually, you're quite excited!"

Hawkins lapsed into sulky silence, and the meal ended with just a hint of constraint.

Mrs. Hawkins and my wife adjourned to the drawing-room, and Hawkins and I were left, theoretically, to smoke a post-prandial cigar. Hawkins, however, had other plans for my entertainment.

"Are they upstairs?" he muttered, as footsteps sounded above us.

"They seem to be."

"Then come with me," whispered Hawkins, heading me toward the servants' staircase.

"Where?" I inquired, suspiciously.

There was a peculiar glitter in his eye.

"Come along, and you'll see," chuckled Hawkins, beginning the ascent. "Oh, I'll tell you what," he continued, pausing on the second landing, "these women make me tired!"

"Indeed?"

"Yes, they do. You needn't look huffy, Griggs. It isn't your wife or my wife. It's the whole sex. They chatter and prattle and make silly jokes about things they're absolutely incapable of understanding."

"My dear Hawkins," I said, soothingly, "you wrong the fair sex."

"Oh, I wrong 'em, eh? Well, what woman knows the first thing about explosives?" demanded Hawkins, heatedly. "Dynamite or rhexite or merganite or carbonite or stonite or vigorite or cordite or ballistite or theorite or maxamite—"

"Stop, Hawkins, stop!" I cried.

"Well, that's all, anyway,' said the inventor. "But what woman knows enough about them to argue the thing intelligently? And yet my wife tells me—I, who have spent nearly half a lifetime in scientific labor—she actually tells me to—to shut up, when I hint at having some slight knowledge of the subject!"

"I know, Hawkins, but your scientific labors have made her—and me—suffer in the past."

"Oh, they have, have they?" grunted Hawkins, climbing toward the top floor "Well, come up, Griggs."

I knew the door at which he stopped. It was that of Hawkins' workshop or laboratory. It was on the floor with the servants, who, poor things, probably did not know or dared not object to the risk they ran.

"What's the peculiar humming?" I asked, pausing on the threshold.

"Only my electric motor," sneered Hawkins. "It won't bite you, Griggs. Come in."

"And what is this big brass bolt on the door?" I continued.

"That?" Oh, that's an idea!" cried the inventor. "That's my new spring-lock. Just look at that lock, Griggs. It simply can't be opened from the outside, and only from the inside by one who knows how to work it. And I'm the only one who knows. When I patent this thing—"

"Well, I wouldn't close the door, Hawkins," I murmured. "You might faint or something, and I'd be shut in here till somebody remembered to hunt for me'.'

"Bah!" exclaimed Hawkins, slamming the door, violently. "Really, for a grown man, you're the most chicken-hearted individual I ever met. But—what's the use of talking about it? To get back to explosives—"

"Oh, never mind the explosives," I said, wearily. "You're right, and that settles it."

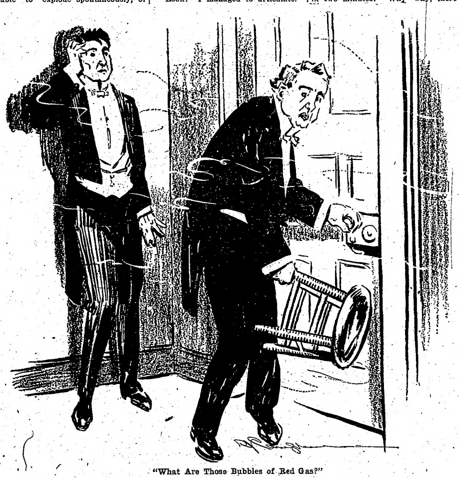
"See here," said Hawkins, sharply; "I had no intention of mentioning explosives to-night, for a particular reason. In a day or two, you'll hear the country ringing with my name, in connection with explosives. But since the subject has come up, if you want to listen to me for a few minutes, I'll interest you mightily."

Kind Heaven! Could I have realized then the bitter truth of those last words!

"Yes, sir," the inventor went on, "as I was saying—or was I saying it?—they all have their faults—dynamite, rhexorite, meganite, carbonite, ston—"

"You went over that list before."

"Well, they all have their faults. Either they explode when you don't want them to, or they don't explode when you do want them to, or they're liable to explode spontaneously, or something else. It's all due, as I have invariably contended, to impure nitro-glycerine or unscientific handling of the pure article."



"What Are Those Bubbles of Red Gas?"

"Yes."

"Yes, indeed. Now, what would you say to an explosive—"

"Absolutely nothing," I replied, decidedly. "I should pass it without even a nod."

"Never mind your nonsense, Griggs. What would you—er—what would you think of an explosive that could be dropped from the roof of a house without detonating?"

"Remarkable!"

"An explosive,' continued Hawkins, impressively, "into which a man might throw a lighted lamp without the slightest fear! How would that strike you?"

"Well, Hawkins," I said, "I think I should have grave doubts of the man's mental condition."

"Oh, just cut out that foolish talk," snapped the inventor. "I'm quite serious. Suppose I should tell you that I had thought and thought over this problem, and finally hit upon an idea for just such a powder? Where would dynamite and rhexite and meganite and all the rest of them be, beside—"

He paused theatrically.

"Hawkinsite!"

"Don't know, Hawkins," I said, unable to absorb any of his enthusiasm. "But let us thank goodness that it is only an idea as yet."

"Oh, but it isn't!" cried the inventor.

"Hawkins!" I gasped, springing to my feet. "What do you mean?"

"I mean just this: Do you see that little vat in the corner?"

I stared fearfully in the direction indicated. A little vat, indeed, I saw. It stood there, half-filled with a sticky mess, through which an agitator, run by the electric motor, was revolving slowly.

"That's Hawkinsite, in the process of manufacture!" the inventor announced.

A sickly terror crept over me. I made instinctively for the door.

"Oh, come back," said Hawkins. "You can't get out, anyway, until I undo the lock. But there's no danger whatever, my dear boy. Just sit down and I'll explain why."

I had no choice about sitting down; a most peculiar weakness of the knees made standing for the moment impossible. I drew my chair to the diagonally opposite corner of the apartment and sat there with my eyes glued upon the vat.

"Now, when all these fellows go about nitrating their glycerine," said Hawkins, serenely, "they simply overlook the scientific principle which I have discovered. For instance, out there at Pompton the vat exploded in the very act of mixing in the glycerine. That's just what is being done over in that corner at this minute—"

"Ouch!" I cried, involuntarily.

"But it won't happen here—it can't happen here," said the inventor, impatiently. "I am using an entirely different combination of chemicals. Now, if there was any trouble of that sort coming, Griggs, the contents of that vat would have begun to turn green before now. But as you see—"

"Haw—Hawkins!" I croaked, hoarsely, pointing a shaking finger at the machine.

"Well, what is it now?"

"Look!" I managed to articulate.

"Oh, Lord!" sniffed the inventor. "I suppose as soon as I said that, you began to see green shades appear, eh? Why—dear me!"

Hawkins stepped rapidly over to the side of the mixer. Then he stepped away with considerably greater alacrity.

There was no two ways about it; the devilish mess in the vat was taking on a marked tinge of green!

"Well—I—I guess I'll shut off the power," muttered Hawkins, suiting the action to the word.

"When the agitator has stopped, Griggs, the mass will cool at once, so you needn't worry."

"If it didn't cool, would it—would it blow up?" I quavered.

"Oh, it would," admitted Hawkins, rather nervously. "But as soon as the mixing ceases, the slight color disappears, as you see."

"I don't see it; it seems to me to be getting greener than ever."

"Well, it's not!" the inventor snapped. "Five minutes from now, that stuff will be an even brown once more."

"And while it's regaining the even brown, why not clear out of here?" I said, eagerly.

"Yes, we may as well, I suppose," said Hawkins, with a readiness which refused to be masked under his assumption of reluctance. "Come on, Griggs."

Hawkins turned the lever on his fancy lock, remarking again:

"Come on."

"Well, open the door."

"It's op—why, what's wrong here?" muttered the inventor, twisting the lever back and forth several times.

"Oh, good heavens, Hawkins!" I groaned. "Has your lock gone back on you, too?"

"No, it has not. Of course not," growled the inventor, tugging at his lever with almost frantic energy. "It's stuck—a little new—that's all. Er—do you see a screw-driver on that table, Griggs?"

I handed him the tool as quickly as possible, noting at the same time that despite the cessation of the stirring "Hawkinsite" was getting greener every second.

"I'll just take it off," panted Hawkins, digging at one of the screws. "No time to tinker with it now."

"Why not? There's no danger."

"Certainly there isn't. But you—you seem to be a little nervous about it, Griggs, and—"

"Hawkins," I cried, "what are those bubbles of red gas?"

"What bubbles?" Hawkins turned as if he had been shot. "Great Scott, Griggs! There were no bubbles of red gas rising out of that stuff, were there?"

"There they go again," I said, pointing to the vat, from which a new ebullition of scarlet vapor had just risen "What does it mean?"

"Mean?" shrieked Hawkins, turning white and trembling in every limb.

"Yes, mean!" I repeated, shaking him. Does it mean that—"

"It means that the cursed stuff has overheated itself, after all. Lord! Lord! However did it happen? Something must have been impure. Something—"

"Never mind something. What will it do?"

"It—it—oh, my God, Griggs: "It'll blow this house into 10,000 pieces within two minutes! Why—why, there's power enough in that little vat to demolish the Brooklyn bridge, according to my calculations. There's enough explosive force in that much Hawkinsite to wreck every office building down town!"

"And we're shut in here with it!"

"Yes! Yes! But let us—"

"Here! Suppose I turn the water into the thing?"

"Don't!" shouted the inventor, wildly, battering at the door with his fists "It would send us into kingdom come the second it touched! Don't stand there gaping, Griggs! Help me smash down this door! We must get out, man! We must get the women out! We must warn the neighborhood! Smash her, Griggs! Smash her! Smash the door!"

"Hawkins," I said, resignedly, as a vicious "sizzzz" announced the evolution of a great puff of red gas, "we can never do it in two minutes. Better not attract the rest of the household by your racket. They may possibly escape. Stop!"

"And stay here and be blown to blazes?" cried Hawkins. "No, sir! Down she goes!"

He seized a stool and dealt a crashing blow upon the panel. It splintered. He raised the stool again, and I could hear footsteps hurrying from below. I opened my mouth to shout a warning, and—

Well, I don't know that I can describe my sensations with any accuracy, vivid as they were at the time.

Some resistless force lifted me from the floor and propelled me toward the half shattered door. Dimly I noted that the same thing had happened to Hawkins. For the tiniest fraction of a second he seemed to be floating horizontally in the air. Then I felt my head collide with wood, the door parted, and I shot through the opening.

I saw the hallway before me; I remember observing with vague wonder that the gas-light went out just as it caught my eye. And then an awful flash blinded me, a roar of 10,000 cannon seemed to split my skull—and that was all.

My eyes opened in the Hawkins' drawing-room—or what remained of it, Our family physician was diligently winding a bandage around my right ankle. An important-looking youth in the uniform of an ambulance surgeon was stitching up a portion of my left forearm with cheerful nonchalance.

My brand-new dress suit, I observed, had lost all semblance to an article of clothing; they had covered me, as I lay upon the couch, with a torn portiere.

The apartment was strangely dark. Here and there stood a lantern, such as are used by the fire department. In the dim light I saw the figure of a policeman standing tiptoe upon a satin chair, plugging with soap the broken gaspipe which had once supported the Hawkins' chandelier.

The ceiling was all down. The walls were bare to the lath in huge patches. The windows had disappeared, and a chill autumn night wind swept through the room.

Bric-a-brac there was none, although here and there, in the mass of plaster on the floor, gleamed bits of glass and china which might once have been parts of ornaments. Hawkinsite had evidently not been quite as powerful as its inventor had imagined, but it had certainly contained force enough to blow about 10,000 dollars out of Hawkins' bank account.

From the street came the hoarse murmur of a crowd. I twisted my head and my eyes fell upon two firemen in the hallway. They were dragging down a line of hose from somewhere upstairs.

Across the room sat my wife and Mrs. Hawkins, disheveled, but alive and apparently unharmed. Hawkins himself leaned wearily back upon a divan, a huge bandage sewed about his forehead, one arm in a sling, and a police sergeant at his side, notebook in hand.

I felt a fiendish exultation at the sight of that official; for one fond moment I hoped that Hawkins was under arrest, that he was in for a life sentence.

"He's conscious, doctor," said the ambulance surgeon.

"Ah, so he is," said my own medical man, as the ladies rushed to my side. "Now, Mr. Griggs, do you feel any pain in the—"

"Oh, Griggs!" cried Hawkins, staggering toward me. "Have you come back to life? Say, Griggs, just think of it! My workshop's blown to smithereens! Every single note I ever made has been destroyed! Isn't it aw—"

In joyful chorus, my wife, Mrs. Hawkins and I said:

"Thank Heaven!"

"But think of it! My notes! The careful record of half a—"

"Herbert!" said his—considerably—better half. "That—will—do!"

"It—oh, well," groaned the inventor, disconsolately, limping back to the divan and the somewhat astonished sergeant of police. Hawkins must have had some sort of influence with the press. Beyond a bare mention of the explosion, the matter never found its way into the newspapers.

After I got around again I tried in vain to spread the tale broadcast. I had some notion that the notoriety might cure Hawkins.

But, after all, I don't know that it would have done much good. I cannot think that a man whose inventive genius will survive an explosion of Hawkinsite is likely to be greatly worried by mere newspaper notoriety.

Blessed Sleep.

The German emperor rises at five o'clock in the morning and goes to bed at one o'clock at night, his regular hours of sleep being thus reduced to four. During his long day of 20 hours there naturally occur intervals of leisure. He possesses the happy faculty of being able to fall asleep anywhere and at any time. If he throws himself in full uniform on a sofa he can be sound asleep within 60 seconds. Blessed are they who can make sleep come when they call her! Napoleon had this power; Grant had it. Gen. Horace Porter relates that the night before the great fighting that culminated in Lee's surrender at Appomattox, Grant, telling his officers that they had better get a little sleep, as they would have a good deal of hard work the next day, threw himself on a lounge and was asleep in two or three minutes.

Probably True.

Wholly unintentional, but felt sharply by its recipient, nevertheless, was the rebuke an old colored "mammy" administered the other day to her mistress, who belongs to an amazing number of clubs. The family has a mansion in one of the suburbs. The privileged old servant does not altogether approve of some methods of the modern woman. One day her mistress had a dozen club friends out to luncheon in her home, and the feast was spread on the porch. By and by the hostess heard a lively colloquy between her eldest hopeful, seven years old, and the nurse. "You just git down outen dat tree," said the nurse. "You want to fall out and kill yourself, do you? Well, you just try it, and see what good it'll do you. You' mother, she dat busy right now she won't even hab time to go to you' funeral."

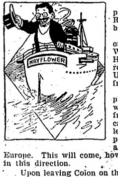
Our Washington Letter

Newsy Information from the Capital of the Nation—President Goes to See Panama—Programme of His Trip—Babies Not for the Department of Agriculture.



WASHINGTON.—President Roosevelt, accompanied by Mrs. Roosevelt and Surgeon General Rixey, of the navy, has gone to investigate the big ditch Uncle Sam is digging on the isthmus.

The president is breaking precedents without mercy in connection with his Panama trip. When he made his trip from New Orleans to Hampton Roads with the armored cruiser squadron he went outside of the marine limits of the United States, and now he will go ten days away from American soil.

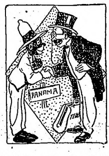
A president of the United States has never placed his foot on foreign soil. Mr. Roosevelt will do so at Panama. Hawaii can be reached from San Francisco in less time than Panama can from Hampton Roads, and Europe in much less time from New York. Perhaps with the precedent of visiting foreign lands established a trip may be made by an American executive to Europe. This will come, however, only when the people are better educated in this direction.

Upon leaving Colon on the return trip the president will go to Porto Rico. The Porto Ricans have the kindliest feeling for the president, as he is known to feel they should have the status of American citizens. Moreover, he honored them by placing their delegate in congress on the American commission to the Pan-American conference at Rio de Janeiro. Therefore he expects to have a cordial reception in the island dependency.

The president will cross the island, talk with the natives, and make one or two speeches. Then he will sail for Hampton Roads. He will be here in ample time for the opening of congress on December 3.

On its voyage to Panama the Louisiana will be accompanied as "bicycle policemen" by the armored cruisers Washington and Tennessee. By means of wireless telegraphy President Roosevelt will be kept au courant with developments in America and the rest of the world, and any business of immediate importance will be conveyed to him by this means. The navy has stations at Charleston and Key West, so that there will be no difficulty about communication on this stage of the voyage.

WILL STUDY MEN AND PROJECT.



When the ships reach the Caribbean sea the wireless station at Gauntanamo will be depended upon to keep Mr. Roosevelt informed and to transmit to Washington any instructions he may care to give. The navy has experimented with the Guantanamo station and has had no trouble in transmitting and receiving messages to and from Panama.

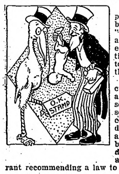
In order that there may be no question, however, other ships equipped with wireless telegraphy will be in constant communication with the Louisiana. The armored cruisers accompanying the battleships can be employed as dispatch boats should the necessity arise. With such a formidable array of armored craft, it is extremely doubtful of even the ghost of the redoubtable Capt. Kidd will care to attempt to board the president's flagship.

President Roosevelt will remain four days on the isthmus. He proposes to tramp along the line of the canal, will inspect the cities of Colon and Panama, ride on work trains, examine the houses in which the laborers live, talk with officials and men, and endeavor to inform himself thoroughly about the great project.

Upon his arrival he will be received by the entire canal commission and by officials representing the government of Panama. Herbert Squiers, who has just been appointed minister to Panama, is arranging quarters for the reception of the president and Mrs. Roosevelt, and will give a dinner in their honor. The president of Panama also will entertain Mr. and Mrs. Roosevelt.

In the absence of the president from Washington, Secretaries Root and Taft will dispose of all matters which do not require to be brought to Mr. Roosevelt's personal attention. The president feels he can get away without embarrassing the government, and especially as he has completed his annual message and disposed of all matters of a pressing nature.

AGRICULTURAL EXPERTS WILL NOT PROBE BABIES.

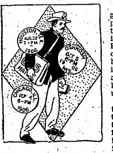


Prospective visitors to the agricultural department can acquire monumental unpopularity by referring even remotely to the subject of "baby breeding." A dull day, and a few facts are perhaps responsible for the report to the effect that, along with plant and animal propagation, the department planned to begin a crusade to improve the American baby. The facts are these:

Prof. W. N. Hays, assistant secretary of agriculture, is secretary of the American Breeders' association. He has named a committee of noted scientists and has asked its members to coordinate some scattered observations already made concerning heredity. It is hoped that from available data it may be learned, in a measure, how heredity and environment affect the development of human beings, particuarly with respect to blindness, deafness, and other principal physical defects, and whether the matter is serious enough to warrant recommending a law to limit marriage of defectives.

The committee has no connection with the government. It will present a report of its work at the meeting of the Breeders' association at Columbus, O., January 15-18. In the meantime, Prof. Hays and agriculture department officials scout the idea that the department proposes to tackle the great American baby in the course of helping to breed better cattle and vegetables. The committee, called the committee on eugenics, includes the following leaders in the scientific world: Prof. Alexander Graham Bell of Washington, D. S. Jordan of Leland Stanford university, Maj. Charles Woodruff of the army medical corps, Charles A. Henderson of the University of Chicago, C. E. Ward of New York, and Rev. J. E. Gilbert of Washington.

BACK STAMPS ON LETTERS IN FAVOR.



HOUSTON TEX. AUG 22 7-PM 1906
OSHKOSH OCT 5 6-PM 1906 WIS.
CHICAGO ILL. SEP 4 6-PM 1906
MAIL

It is said that the postal department is beginning to hear from business men in different parts of the country regarding their dislike of the recent order to discontinue the back-stamping of mail in the post offices at Los Angeles, Kansas City, Minneapolis, St. Paul, Detroit and other cities. That disfavor is also shared by the business men of Washington, who are not slow in their intimations that the back stamp enables a man who gets a delayed letter to register his kick with the person at fault and largely fixes upon the party responsible for the delay.

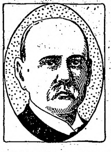
The back-stamping consists of stamping on the back of each letter the name of the city or town in which it is received, together with the time of its receipt. This with the stamp on the front of the letter shows the actual time occupied in the transmission of the letter from the place in which it was mailed to the town or place where it was received, thus really acting as a check system on the promptness of the post office system.

Acting Postmaster General Hitchcock says that it is not unlikely that this back-stamping will be discontinued in all parts of the country, the claim being advanced that its abolition would expedite the delivery of mail from one to three hours, which is no inconsiderable item in the economy of a business day.

On the other hand a leading manufacturer voices his kick as follows: "I would like to see the back stamp retained. Why? Well, there are many instances when a delay in the delivery of a business letter is extremely costly. When such a delay occurs the business man wants to go somewhere and ascertain who was to blame for the trouble. If the back stamp is on the letter he has a pointer as to whether the local carriers or somebody else is to blame. The back stamp is a good thing and should be retained."

PEOPLE TALKED ABOUT

FROM SECTION HAND TO RAILROAD HEAD



From section hand on an insignificant railroad in Virginia to president of the great Illinois Central system is the rise of J. T. Harahan, successor to Stuyvesant Fish. Mr. Harahan was born at Lowell, Mass., in 1843. When 21 years old he became a track laborer on the Orange & Alexandria railroad in Virginia. He drifted to Nashville, Tenn., where he held various jobs on the Louisville & Nashville road. In 1872 he secured the position of roadmaster of the Nashville & Decatur line. From 1879 to 1881 he was superintendent of the Memphis division of the Louisville & Nashville.

He was gradually promoted, until on July 1, 1884, he was made general manager of the Louisville & Nashville system. He held that position only six months, leaving the road because of trouble with President M. L. Smith. For three months he was general superintendent of the Pittsburg division of the Baltimore & Ohio railroad. During this time the differences between him and the president of the Louisville & Nashville were adjusted and he returned to it as assistant general manager in April, 1885.

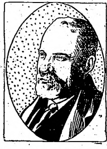
The "peace agreement" between President Smith and Mr. Harahan was short lived. On October 1, 1885, Mr. Harahan finally severed his connection with the Louisville & Nashville and came to Chicago as assistant general manager of the Lake Shore & Michigan Southern railroad.

John Newell was then its president, and his arbitrary methods did not result in congenial relations between him and Mr. Harahan. After staying a few months on the Lake Shore Mr. Harahan accepted the position of general manager of the Chesapeake & Ohio railroad. Things there were not at all to his liking, and he resigned after a very short time.

Mr. Harahan's next step was on the highway leading directly to prosperity. He had a friend in R. T. Wilson, of Memphis, Tenn., who made a fortune in cotton at New Orleans and was the principal owner of the Louisville, New Orleans & Texas railroad, extending from Memphis to New Orleans. Mr. Harahan was made general manager of that road by Mr. Wilson. In less than a year, under Mr. Harahan's management, the possibilities of the road were made so apparent that he succeeded in negotiating the sale of it to the Illinois Central, and on November 1, 1900, he became second vice president of that system.

When he first came to Chicago in that position he was placed in charge of the operation of the system, but it was not long before he was given charge of all the departments of the company, being responsible only to President Fish. The remarkable physical condition of the Illinois Central system is a monument to Mr. Harahan's ability as an operating officials. The policy which made it the power it is to-day among railroads was in many cases conceived and carried out by Mr. Harahan, with the indorsement of Mr. Fish.

NEW SPELLING REFORMER



With the telegraphic code as a basis, Philip B. Lehmann, a former school-teacher of La Crosse, Wis., at last has perfected a new form of phonetic spelling, on which he has beeen working for the last 15 years. He proposes to bring it to the attention of President Roosevelt and Andrew Carnegie.

In the new form of spelling there are no silent letters, except in homophonous words and the letter "h." There are no alphabetical equivalents, excepting "g" for "j" and "y" for "i," each at the end of words and "x" for "ks," and "gs" and "k" for "c."

An increase is made in the present alphabet from 26 characters to 43. Of these 38 are letters and five are combinations. "Th," "sh," "ch," "wh," and "ng," constitute the oral elements of the new language when written.

Lehmann conceived his idea while working as an operator on the old Southern Minnesota road, now a branch of the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul.

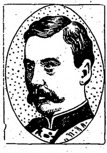
Lehmann brands the Carnegie spelling board as a detriment to spelling reform. Its results, he says, show absolutely no improvement or general benefits. He believes that Carnegie is spending thousands foolishly in having a list of "300" phonetic words compiled. He bases this belief on the fact that it is impossible to form or express 43 sounds with an alphabet of only 26 letters.

The new alphabet contains six sounds of "a," two of "e," two of "i," three of "o," four of "u." When a letter has a different sound, a curl or twist denotes the variations in pronunciation.

To illustrate the new system, the following examples are given:

Care, kar.
Ice, ic.
Lone, lon.
Clay kla.

HERO OF LADYSMITH RETIRES



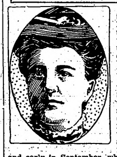
The retirement of Gen. Sir Redvers Henry Buller, commander in chief of the British army, was gazettted the other day, to take effect immediately. He has been succeded by Gen. Sir W. G. Nicholson, former commandant at Gibraltar and British military attache with the Japanese army during the Russo-Japan war.

Gen. Buller is best known for his campaign in relief of Ladysmith during the Boer war and for his disastrous defeat at Spion Kop when his command was overwhelmed by a much smaller force of Boers. Gen. Buller threw the blame for the disaster on Gen. Warren, a subordinate in command, and brought down on himself the criticism of Lord Roberts, general in chief, both for losing the battle and laying the blame on another.

Gen. Buller served during the Chinese campaign in 1860 and also commanded a division in both the Kaffir and Zulu wars in 1878-9. He was with Kitchener in the Egyptian campaign and won promotion for conspicuous gallantry in the various desert battles.

Gen. Buller owns a magnificent estate at Downs, to which he will retire.

MILAN HONORS AMERICAN WOMAN

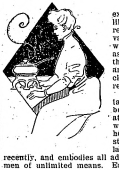


Although the United States did not choose to take part officially in the exposition held at Milan, Italy, in commemoration of the Simplon tunnel opening, it contains one American exhibit which has attracted general and approving attention from many thousands of visitors. It is the exhibit of the Institute for Social Service of New York, which is in charge of Dr. and Mrs. William Howe Tolman.

Mrs. Tolman, who is as deeply interested in the work of the institute as either Dr. Josiah Strong, its president, or Dr. Tolman, its secretary, has the distinction of being the only woman serving upon any of the juries of award. This distinction is the more noticeable because of the meager American representation at the exposition. The jury upon which she served made the awards in the group dealing with cooperation and mutuality, and for several weeks, late in August and early in September, when the heat was greatest, she was kept busy from morning to night four or five days in the week examining exhibits and discussing the awards with her fellow jurors, who, of course, were all men and nearly or quite all of whom spoke no English, but mainly Italian and French. As Mrs. Tolman is not fluent in either of these languages, though proficient in German, she had to make use of an interpreter, and it was necessary for her to exercise a good deal of cleverness in pressing the claims of the American exhibits, which she thought were fairly entitled to awards. She and her friends feel elated over the large number of awards which she secured. Mrs. Tolman, who is a university graduate, has always taken much interest in social problems, and has devoted herself closely to their study during the last 15 years. In that period she has spent much of her time in Europe that she might observe at first hand.

Gossip of Gotham Town

Interesting Bits of News Gathered by Our Correspondent—New Phase of Co-operative Housing to Be Tried—Woman Given High Post—Farm Worth Millions in City.



NEW YORK.—Within a short time a unique example of the cooperative apartment house, unlike any heretofore erected in this city, will be ready for occupancy. This is the luxurious "private hotel" at 11, 13 and 15 East Forty-fifth street, which has been erected by a corporation known as the Home Club. Only six families will occupy the immense structure, those of Wilbur C. Fisk and Pliny Fisk, the principal stockholders in the club, and four others whose names have not been revealed.

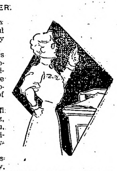
As the first cooperative apartment house containing all the features of a high-class hotel ever built in this city, the structure has attracted much attention from those wealthy New Yorkers who would eliminate housekeeping cares but dislike hotel or the usual apartment house life. The structure is the natural evolution of the numerous large studio buildings that have been planned recently, and embodies all additional improvements that could be devised by men of unlimited means. Each of the tenants will have an available floor space equal to that in a five-story residence. Their meals will be served from a kitchen in the basement to either a general or private dining-room, as they prefer, and every convenience of a modern hotel will be at their disposal. The studio buildings are apartment houses pure and simple, and, although usually cooperative, each family, to quote the law defining multiple dwellings, "does its cooking on the premises," or, in other words, in individual kitchens.

The members of the Home Club will be their own shopkeepers and tradesmen, as the corporation is empowered by its charter to act as garage keeper, wine and provision dealer, caterer, florist, tobacconist, warehouseman, barber and hairdresser. All the provisions will come direct from the great estate of the Fisks, "Wilburtha," on the Delaware river, near Trenton, N. J.

The hotel is of steel, limestone, and brick, and, with the land, represents an investment of $1,000,000. Lavish ornamentation is used throughout the building, the first and second floors, where the ballroom, conservatory, and drawing and billiard rooms are situated, being made especially imposing with series of marble pillars. On the top of the house a roof garden has been laid out, adjoining which is a studio of classic design in the form of a penthouse containing a valet's bedroom and a suite and bath. A sun parlor covers the remainder of the space. On the fourth floor are the quarters for servants and attendants, reached by a private stairway.

When the plans for the "private hotel" were filed with the building department last year Superintendent Hopper was uncertain whether or not it came under the provisions of the tenement house law. Tenement House Commissioner Butler, to whom the question was finally referred, decided that the act did not apply to the building.

HIGH FEDERAL PLACE FOR WOMAN LAWYER.



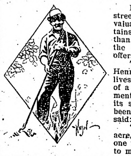
Mrs. Mary Grace Quackenbos, one of New York's best woman lawyers, has been appointed special assistant United States district attorney by Henry L. Stimson, United States attorney.

Mrs. Quackenbos is the first woman who has attained so important a position in the legal profession. Her energy and thoroughness in investigating peonage cases in the lumber and turpentine camps of the south as representative of the "People's Law Firm" brought to her the recognition of the United States district attorney.

The first case which Mrs. Quackenbos will prosecute will be that of Sigmund S. Schwartz, proprietor of a New York employment bureau, charged with having induced men to accept positions in the peonage districts under many glowing promises.

Mrs. Quackenbos' rise in the profession has been remarkable. Admitted to the bar in July, 1904, she has in two years figured in several celebrated cases. Perhaps the best known of these was the case of Mrs. Antoinette Tolla, murderess, of Kingsland, N. J., whom she saved from the gallows. On March 9, three days before Mrs. Tolla was to hang, Mrs. Quackenbos, after a week's effort, induced the board of pardons of New Jersey to commute the death sentence to seven and one-half years' imprisonment.

REAL FARM IN HEART OF CITY.

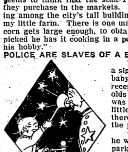


Between Ninety-fourth and Ninety-fifth streets, on West End avenue, is one of the most valuable farms in the world. To be sure it contains only one acre, but that acre is worth more than $1,000,000. It is owned by Eugene Higgins, the carpet manufacturer, who has resisted all offers for its purchase.

This wee farm is leased for a nominal sum to Henry West, a steady, hard-working man, who lives in a little rustic cottage perched on the side of a miniature hill. Behind it rises a tall apartment house, which late in the afternoon throws its shadow over the farm. Mr. West, who has been cultivating this plot of ground for 25 years, said:

"Although my little place contains only an acre, it keeps me busy all summer. I have no one to help me; I do the work alone, and manage to make every inch of the ground productive. I raise green corn, string beans and potatoes, all of which I sell to people living in the vicinity, except that which I keep for my own use. Everybody seems to think that the stuff I raise is 100 per cent. better than that which they purchase in the markets. Indeed, it is such a novelty to see crops growing among the city's tall buildings that people come long distances to inspect my little farm. There is one man who comes here every day, when the sweet corn gets large enough, to obtain his supply. Ten minutes after the corn is picked he has it cooking in a pot on his kitchen stove. Fresh vegetables are his hobby."

POLICE ARE SLAVES OF A BABY.



The officials of the Children's society breathed a sigh of relief when they got rid of a two-year-old baby boy who was on their hands for two weeks recently. There have been hundreds of two-year-olds in the society rooms since the organization was founded, but none ever compared with the little unknown who made things so lively that there wasn't an hour's peace while he stayed in the place.

On the night of October 4 little Samson, as he was quickly called, was found in Corlears Hook park, where he had been abandoned. He was turned over to a cop, who took him to the Delancey street police station. Thence he was shipped to the Children's society. He was a pretty little youngster, with light hair, big blue eyes and fair complexion, and he was fairly well dressed.

Although unable to talk, he made it known that he wanted a drink of water and a couple of cops on reserve made a rush to wait on him. When the tot drank his fill he let the dipper fly and caught Policeman Sullivan over the eye. He laughed in glee when he saw the cop rubbing his sore spot and straightway bawled for all he was worth until the dipper was handed back to him. A second time he let it rip and it crashed through a window of the back room.

Seeing that he had done some destruction, he appeared to be happy for awhile, but once his eyes rested upon the checkers and dominoes on the table he slid off the bench and toddled over. The big cops didn't like the interruption of the game, but there was nothing to do but quit then and there. Samson gathered all the checkers and dominoes together and then let loose a fusillade. Laughing and chuckling, he threw every one at the cops, who dodged and fled from the room.

Left alone, Samson toddled across the room and kicked over every cuspidor, overturned benches and chairs and with a mighty effort tipped the heavy table. The sergeant, hearing the racket, rushed in and just nailed Samson in the act of hurling a brush through a pane of glass.

COUNTESS ANNA IS GIVEN DIVORCE

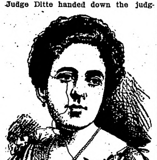
COUNT BONI'S APPEAL FOR EXAMINATION OF WITNESSES IS DENIED.

Application for Alimony Is Refused and Children Are Given to Mother, but Must Not Be Taken from France Without Consent of Count.

Paris, Nov. 15.—The tribunal of first instance of the Seine, Judge Ditte presiding, at noon Wednesday granted a divorce to the Countess De Castellane (formerly Anna Gould of New York, and gave her the custody of her children, who, however, will not be allowed to be taken from France, without the consent of their father, Count Boni De Castellane. The end of the famous case came suddenly. The court brushed aside the demand of the count's lawyers for an examination of witnesses, and, as anticipated, the public prosecutor did not even ask to be heard.

Count May See Children.

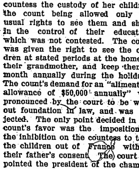
As soon as the court assembled Judge Ditte handed down the judgment, which is a sweeping victory for the countess. In granting her petition for divorce the court gave the countess the custody of her children, the count being allowed only the usual rights to see them and share in the control of their education, which was not contested. The count was given the right to see the children at stated periods at the home of their grandmother, and keep them a month annually during the holidays. The count's demand for an "alimentary allowance of $50,000 annually" was pronounced by the court to be without foundation in law, and was rejected. The only point decided in the count's favor was the imposition of the inhibition on the countess to take the children out of France without their father's consent. The court appointed the president of the chamber of notaries to liquidate the affairs of the husband and wife.



Countess Anna De Castellane.

Costs Against Castellane.

The judgment was given with costs against the count. The decree, the reading of which consumed hardly five minutes, was delivered by the judge in a voice so low as to be practically inaudible to the eager crowd filling the courtroom. Many women climbed the chairs in vain efforts to hear the decision, and when they were aware that a divorce was granted they seemed actually to resent the loss of a public trial at which people in high society would be compelled to testify.



Count Boni De Castellane.

Correspondence Was Offensive.

The text of the decre does not go into the details of the countess' bill of particulars, "inasmuch as Mme. de Castellane submitted letters and documents several of which were from the count himself, establishing sufficiently that since their marriage, notably in 1898, 1902 and 1905, he had relations and correspondence with various women, which was most offensive to a wife, thus rendering himself guilty of acts justifying a divorce, and as he had failed to establish a reconciliation, the petition of Mme. de Castellane is granted."

Boy Falls Five Stories and Lives.

New York, Nov. 16.—James Moran, aged 11 years, pitched headlong from the roof of a five-story building. His screams startled Julius Seligman who, glancing up as the boy struck upon his shoulders, was knocked from his feet. He clutched young Moran around the waist, so that only the child's feet and legs struck the ground. Although bruised, Seligman was not hurt and called an ambulance. Young Moran was taken to a hospital. He was found to be apparently uninjured.

MEMORIAL WINDOW FOR HAY

JEWS TO HONOR LATE SECRETARY OF STATE.

Congregation at Philadelphia Starts Innovation of Honoring Non-Jew Who Was Friend of People.

Washington, Nov. 14. — Secretary Root has acceptetd an invitation to attend the dedication of a window to the late John Hay in the synagogue of Keneseth Israel congregation, Philadelphia, on December 2.

Oscar Solomon Strauss, who is to succeed Secretary Metcalf as the head of the department of commerce and labor, also will attend the dedicatory ceremonies.

Dr. Krauskopf, pastor of the congregation, said that the perpetuation of the memory of the late Secretary Hay by the installataion of a window in a synagogue is a decided innovation, and will be the first instance where a non-Jew has been honored by the installation of any sort of memorial in a Jewish house of worship.

This exception is made because of Mr. Hay's service in behalf of the unfortunate Jews at Kishineff, Russia, and in recognition of his efforts to prevent Jews from being discriminated against in any way.

FARMERS JOIN LABEL FIGHT

To Interchange Emblems with the Trades Unions.

Minneapolis, Minn., Nov. 16.—Embodying a membership of over a million, claiming to represent more than one-seventh of the entire population of the country, the American Society of Equity, the recently formed national farmers' union, Thursday became affiliated, in a limited degree, with the American Federation of Labor, now in convention here.

After a discussion as to the ways and means between the representatives of the farmers and a committee appointed by President Gompers for a more active cooperation between the toilers of the cities and the tillers of the soil, the committee reported to the convention that the only practical action at this time in furthering the interests of either is the cooperation of both, the committee urging a call upon wage-earners still outside the folds of the unions to affiliate with them and further recommended that all members of the federation demand the products of the farm, garden and orchard that bear the union label of the farmers' organization, since the farmers will in return purchase nothing but union-made goods.

MOTHER AND CHILDREN PERISH

Four Burned to Death Despite Efforts of Husband and Father.

Coldwater, Mich., Nov. 15.—Mrs. Charles Mowry, aged 21 years, and her three children, Homer, aged six years; Louise, aged three years, and a baby of six months were burned to death early Wednesday in their home on a farm near Batavia Station, six miles southwest of this city on the Lake Shore railroad.

Charles Mowry, the husband and father, rose early and built two fires in the house. He then went to the barn to do chores and while there discovered that his house was afire. He rushed back, but the flames had made such headway that he could not enter the house and his calls through the windows to his family brought no response.

It is thought that the mother and three children were suffocated to death while asleep.

DEDICATE THE IOWA MEMORIAL

Exercises at Monument in Vicksburg National Military Park.

Vicksburg, Miss., Nov. 16. — The Iowa state memorial in the Vicksburg national military park was dedicated Thursday afternoon by Gov. Cummins of Iowa. The absence of a military pageant was a notable feature of the dedication programme, only two militia companies participating. A party of Iowa citizens, a band from that state, school children occupying symbolic floats, and officials of both Iowa and Mississippi, carried out the exercises. Those in attendance included J. W. Noble of St. Louis, formerly secretary of the interior, and Gen. J. W. Weaver and Gov. Vardaman of Mississippi. The memorial is not yet completed, but was dedicated at this time along with monuments to Iowa soldiers in other parts of the south.

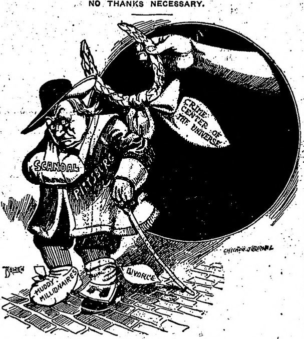
Madrid, Nov. 16.—The cabinet Thursday reaffirmed the decision of the preceding ministry to the effect that Spain shall participate in the Jamestown exposition.

NO THANKS NECESSARY.



SUIT TO DISSOLVE BIG OIL MONOPOLY

STANDARD TO FACE FIGHT FOR EXISTENCE IN THE FEDERAL COURTS.

Attorney General Moody Orders Bill Filed to Enjoin Parent and Its Constituents from Entering Into Any Contract in Restraint of Trade.

St. Louis, Nov. 16.—The United States government Thursday made the initial move to dissolve the Standard Oil so-called monopoly by filing in the United States district court in St. Louis a petition in equity against the Standard Oil company of New Jersey and its 70 constituent corporations and partnerships, and seven defendants, including John D. Rockefeller and William Rockefeller, asking that the combination be declared unlawful and in the future enjoined from entering into any contract or combination in restraint of trade.

The suit is brought under the Sherman anti-trust act, which the Standart and its constituent companies and the seven individual defendants are charged with violating.

Criminal Prosecution Later.

In a formal statement by Attorney General Moody he says that criminal prosecution is reserved for future consideration.

Frank B. Kellogg, of St. Paul, Minn., special assistant to Attorney General Moody, brought the petition to St. Louis. The document was filed with the clerk of the United States circuit court by the government's local representative, United States District Attorney D. P. Dyer and Special Counsel Kellogg.

Moody Orders Petition Filed.

When court convened at ten o'clock Attorneys Kellogg and Dyer held a closed conference for half an hour, at the end of which time Special Counsel Kellogg informed Attorney General Moody by long distance telephone that the petition was about to be filed and was instructed to proceed. Attorneys Kellogg and Dyer then went into the clerk's office, where the petition was formally sworn to and filed by Col. Dyer.

President Redeems Promise.

The investigation into methods pursued by the Standard Oil company began early in 1905, and the results were laid before congress last May by President Roosevelt, who accompanied the report by a special message denouncing the apparent methods pursued. The president asserted at the time that suits would be instituted in the United States courts to abolish the combination, and the filing of the suit Thursday marks the initial step.

PACIFIC NORTHWEST FLOODED

Communication by Rail and Wire Cut Off by Water.

Portland, Ore., Nov. 16.—Portland is cut off from communication with Seattle, Tacoma, Bellingham, Spokane and every point north and east of Kelso, Wash. Neither the Western Union nor the Postal Telegraph company has a wire into any of the cities named.

The storm which swept over the entire northwest Wednesday and Wednesday night has created a condition never before experienced in the northwest. The railroads in every direction are either completely at a standstill or so badly interrupted that communication by rail except to the south is well-nigh impossible, as a result of the washing out of bridges. In addition wagon roads are impassable, telegraph and telephone wires are down.

Plan Demonstration at Morocco.

Paris, Nov. 17.—Spain and France have arranged to make a naval demonstration and land marines in Morocco should such measures prove necessary for the protection of foreigners before the ratification of the Algeciras convention and the installation of the international police, which is not expected to take place before February 1, 1907.

WILL NOT REORGANIZE OIL

OFFICIAL SAYS THERE IS NO REASON TO CHANGE.

If the Company Has Done Wrong It Will Not Avail to Alter Methods of Doing Business.

New York, Nov. 17.—In an interview a representative of the Standard Oil company said Friday concerning a report that the company was preparing to dissolve voluntarily:

"Any reports that steps have been taken by the Standard Oil company to dissolve are without foundation. Surely such a report carries its own contradiction.

"The Standard Oil company adopted its present form of doing business in obedience to the law when the original organization was condemned by one state. We have done business as the Standard Oil company of New Jersey for more than a dozen years and until it can be shown that our organization is illegal we shall cantinue to do business.

"It is an expensive ordeal to 'turn over' a corporation of the size of the Standard Oil company with its worldwide ramifications and one not likely to be undertaken voluntarily. Besides, what form does the government wish the oil business to take? You cannot legislate a gallon of oil out of existence. Even if it should be held that we have done wrong, it would not save us from the consequences to dissolve now. You may give a flat contradiction to any report that we have arranged to take such a step."

J. D. ROCKEFELLER IS INDICTED

Oil Magnate Is Accused in Bills Returned by Grand Jury.

Findlay, Ohio, Nov. 15.—The grand jury Wednesday found indictments against John D. Rockefeller and three other persons in connection with the Standard Oil inquiry which was reopened upon the reconvening of that body in adjourned session Tuesday.

What the indictments allege or who the three other defendants in addition to Mr. Rockefeller are was not given out by Prosecutor David, who, however, admitted the indictments had been returned.

It is understood the indictments charge the defendants with having continued to contract the oil production and to fix prices on and after July 7, 1906, in violation of the Valentine anti-trust act, a state law under which the recent prosecution of the Standard Oil company in this county was conducted and in which a fine of $5,000 was imposed by the probate court.

SHERRICK DECISION REVERSED

Indiana Supreme Court Finds Ex-Auditor's Sentence Illegal.

Indianapolis, Ind., Nov. 17.—The supreme court Friday reversed the decision of the lower court by which David E. Sherrick, former auditor of state, was sent to the penitentiary for an indeterminate sentence of from two to 14 years, charged with embezzlement of the state funds.

The decision of the court orders a new trial of the case. Sherrick has been in the penitentiary at Michigan City for several months. The court holds that Sherrick did not embezzle state money, as the money belonged to the insurance companies and not to the state.

FIND ROAD GUILTY OF REBATING

Motion to Set Aside Verdict Promptly Denied by Court.

New York, Nov. 16.—The New York Central & Hudson River Railroad company was convicted in the United States circuit court Thursday of granting a rebate of $26,000 to the American Sugar Refining company, and the trial of the latter company for having accepted that sum as rebates will begin at once in the same court.

The jury was out about two hours and immediately upon the announcement of its verdict of "guilty" counsel for the defendant company moved to set aside the verdict, which Judge Holt promptly denied.

ORGANIZE TO WORK FOR DEEP CHANNEL

CONVENTION STARTS TO SECURE PUBLICITY FOR PROJECT FROM LAKES TO GULF.

Claim Chief Obstacle to the Prosecution of the Scheme was Removal by the Chicago Drainage Canal, Which Makes Rest of Work Easy.

St. Louis, Nov. 17.—The Lakes to the Gulf Deep Waterways association became a fact Friday when the plan for permanent organization and the report of the nominating committee were adopted at the final session of the convention of the provisional association, organized by Congressman William Lorimer, of Chicago, and several of his congressional associates, which has been in session at the Odeon for two days.

Resolutions were unanimously passed by the convention and follow in part:

Route of Waterway.

"The proposed deep waterway is to extend from the Chicago drainage canal through the valleys of the Desplaines and Illinois rivers to the Mississippi river at Grafton, Ill., and thence down the Mississippi to St. Louis, and is to have a minimum depth of 14 feet throughout. We recommend that for the purpose of meeting the probable future needs of navigation that the minimum depth over the mitre sills of the locks should be 21 feet in the initial construction.

Barrier Is Removed.

"The excessive cost of the project, as shown by the engineers' estimates, was due mainly to the existence of the prominent barrier between the great lakes and the Mississippi valley.

"The chief obstacle to the prosecution of this project has been removed by the drainage canal.

"According to the estimates based upon recent surveys by the United States engineers, the work remaining to be done in order to complete the deep waterway channel to St. Louis, will cost $31,000,000.

Appeal to Congress.

"Believing present transportation facilities of the United States to be inadequate and wholly unsatisfactory, we favor appropriations by the congress of the United States in sufficient amounts to create such additional transportation facilities as the growing needs of the nation demand and to the end that such appropriations shall be secured, this association recommends to its representatives in congress, diligent, assiduous and untiring efforts to secure the necessary means with which to develop a deep waterway."

Oppose Limiting Water Supply.

Resolutions were adopted protesting against any treaty made by the United States with Canada by which the amount of water to be taken from Lake Michigan for the use of the Chicago drainage canal shall be limited, and authorizing the president of the association to appoint 50 delegates to the convention of the National Rivers and Harbors Congress to be held in Washington next month.

Prosecuting Attorney Brown said that warrants would be asked for charging Lewis with murder, and Charging Ryan and O'Brien with aiding and abetting a prize fight.

"OLD MAN" LIBBY'S DEER.

Remarkable Story of Killing Told by Blind Guide.

"Old Man" Libby is one of the best known guide camp keepers in the state of Maine, and for years has been totally blind. Four years ago he carried into Bangor the carcass of a deer, and had it taken to the office of Fish and Game Commissioner Carpenter. Libby expressed the wish that the venison be given to the Bangor hospital.

Carpenter wanted to know who killed the deer, and was much surprised when Libby claimed to have been the destroyer.

"Why, Libby," he asked, "how did you, a blind man, manage to kill this deer?"

"Wal, you see," drawled Libby, "I was standing outside my tent yesterday morning, ax in hand, just going to chop a leetle wood, when I felt this durned critter rushing onto me. I thought 'twas a b'ar, so I hauled off and soaked him."

The commissioner always has a grin on tap when telling this story, for he has doubts as to who killed the deer.

A MISSOURI WOMAN

Tells a Story of Awful Suffering and Wonderful Relief.

Mrs. J. B. Johnson, of 603 West Hickman street, Columbia, Mo., says: "Following an operation two years ago, dropsy set in, and my left side was so swollen the doctor said he would have to tap out the water. There was constant pain and a gurgling sensation around my heart, and I could not raise my arm above my head. The kidney action was disordered and passages of the secretions too frequent. On the advice of my husband I began using Doan's Kidney Pills. Since using two boxes my trouble has not reappeared. This is wonderful, after suffering two years."

Workman's Pride at Rest.

Joseph Mowbray, who was building a chimney at the Westwood church, Kalkaska, having raised it to the height of 25 feet, and run out of brick descended to the ground. He had scarcely done so when lightning struck the church. The point where Joe would have been, had he remained, was that at which the bolt did some of its worst work. Joe feels grateful for being out of brick, as had he been killed at work he would always have thought Providence dissatisfied with the job, and Joe prides himself that no man this side of Jordan can build a better chimney than he.—Detroit News.

Woman Angler Wins Laurels.

A woman angler, Miss J. M. Wheeler, who recently gained a silver medal for landing a huge skate weighing 127 pounds, has just captured another monster of 144 pounds, at Ballycotton, Ireland. It is believed to be the largest fish ever caught by a lady in the British isles.

A Wonderful Discovery

It has been the aim of scientists for years to find some liquid preparation which would possess anodyne, astringent and antiseptic properties and yet be of such a consistency that it would penetrate, first, through the skin, then through the muscles and finally to the very bones, exerting on its way down, healing and pain destroying properties.

Max R. Zaegel, a graduate of the Philadelphia College of Pharmacy, established at Sheboygan, Wis., as a chemist for the last 23 years, has discovered this long sought secret. It consists of a mixture of vegetable and mineral oils forming an amber colored liquid of pleasant odor and taste, which, when used as directed, restores vitality and strength and gives prompt relief to pain.

Applied to cuts, sores, burns and bruises it heals, as owing to its antiseptic properties, no pus or matter can form in any wound where Z. M. O., this wonderful oil is used.

If you have catarrh, rheumatism, piles, or pain back, write Mr. Zaegel and he will be pleased to mail you a sample bottle of Z. M. O. free.

Address your letter to M. R. Zaegel & Co., chemists, 181 Main St., Sheboygan, Wis.

It is free now, so do not fail to write to-day, stating the nature of your complaint.

Interesting Items Gathered in the Gopher State

Land Hungry.

Duluth—Crazed with land hunger, over two hundred men, women and children crowded into the narrow corridor on the second floor of the federal building anxious to secure a claim in one of the three new townships which were opened for filing.

Many of them had been in line for over a week, and so rapid has been the growth of this land-mad crowd and so fierce the struggle for places in the line, that, fearing trouble, Chief Troyer detailed a squad of policemen to guard the halls and maintain order.

None dared to leave the line even for a breath of fresh air, lest their place be "jumped" by one holding a less advantageous position in the line, and so they ate, slept and existed on the bare tiled floor of the stuffy corridor, the air of which became so foul that other occupants of the building have made strenuous complaints.

Goes to Prison.

Faribault—The sentencing of Thomas B. Clemens, the aged banker, to eight years in the penitentiary by the United States circuit court was affirmed by the circuit court of appeals.

The opinion is by Judge Adams, and Judges Sanborn and Hook concur in the opinion.

Clement was indicted for making false entries of funds and credits of the First National bank of Faribault, of which he is president. He demurred to some of the counts and moved for a continuance of the case at the time it was first up for trial on the ground thas his physical infirmities prevented his being present at the trial. He interposed at the close of the case a demurrer to the evidence on the ground that it failed to establish the commission of any offenses charged.

Teachers' Meeting.

Winona—The most successful convention in the history of the Southeastern Minnesota Educational association closed after a three days' session in Winona. In a large measure this success was due to the untiring work of Supt. Kunze of Red Wing, who was the president. He secured wide advertising, which brought out a large attendance, and he prepared an elaborate program, providing for many sectional meetings, which were held.

At the business session Rochester was chosen as the next place of meeting, and the following officers were elected: President, Supt. E. L. Potter of Hastings; secretary and treasurer, Supt. W. C. Herman of Mazeppa; executive committee, Supt. S. Overhelt of Rochester, Miss Theda Gildemeister of Winona.

Lumber Cut.

Minneapolis—Nearly 50,000,000 feet less of logs were sawed in Minneapolis this year than last. The Minneapolis mills closed for the season, with a total record of from 300,000,000 to 320,000,000 feet.

The falling off in the output is due to the fact that since last season one mill has been abandoned, and the others have found difficulty at times in securing logs. Two of the mills have not been running nights this season at all.

The figures for the past five years are as follows: 368,947,000 feet in 1905; 386,911,000 in 1904; 442,535,000 in 1903; 465,204,000 in 1902; 588,581,000 in 1901; 538,583,000 in 1900.

Resigns.

New Ulm—The resignation of Judge B. F. Webber was accepted yesterday by the governor and I. M. Olson of Sleepy Eye appointed to fill the unexpired term until Jan. 1, when Judge Olson takes his seat by virtue of his election last Tuesday. Judge Webber's health failed him last summer and he withdrew from the contest for election. At the same time he wanted to resign, but the governor persuaded him to withhold the resignation until his successor was elected, and in the meantime other judges were designated to hold court in his district. As soon as Olson's election became a certainty the governor made the appointment.

ROOSEVELT SEES CULEBRA CUT

President Rides on Steam Shovel with the Engineer.

Panama, Nov. 17.—President Roosevelt, who stopped at the Tivoli hotel Thursday night, started at seven o'clock Friday morning with Mrs. Roosevelt and the other members of his party to make an examination of the Culebra cut. The weather was overcast, threatening rain. At half past eight the presidential train arrived at Pedro Miguel, where some steam shovels were at work. The president had his train stopped for the purpose of making a personal examination.

At this point in the cut the peculiar soil conditions have resulted in more or less frequent landslides, and this fact was brought to the president's attention.

President Roosevelt descended from his train and climbed up on one of the steam shovels, taking a seat alongside Engineer Gray, whom he subjected to a searching fire of questions regarding the work. During his conversation Engineer Gray took the opportunity, on behalf of himself and the other engineers, to declare that unlike the railroad engineers, they were not paid for overtime. The president promised to look into this matter. He stayed on the steam shovel about 20 minutes.

A POSER.

A certain psychologist is making some original researches regarding the so-called "questioning age" of children. He has an inquisitive young son that serves for an illustration, and one day, when the two were walking, he purposely allowed the boy's questions to go on and on while he answered each one as best he could. At last he was forced to fall back on that ever-useful, ever-available answer:

"God made it."

But Carl was not silenced.

"Is there anything God can't do?" he asked.

"No, my son."

"Then could he lick another God just as big and strong as He is?"—Life.

The Near-Age.

"Have you any good butter?" she asked.

"None to-day, ma'am. But we have some good near-butter."

"Don't want it. Got any fresh eggs?"

"Just out. But we have some very nice near-fresh eggs."

"Keep 'em. How about your cream cheese?"

"Nothing but near-cheese, ma'am."

"You're near out of everything, aren't you?"

"O, no. We have lots of near-things left."

"Well, it's near time for me to be going. When you get stocked up drop me a near-postal and I'll call."—Milwaukee Sentinel.

A Reliable Substitute.

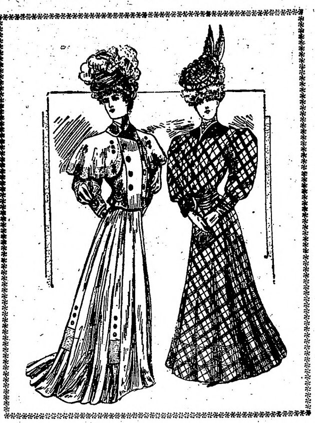
Winter Street Suits.



The costume at the left is of dark violet cloth. The skirt is composed of alternating wide and narrow breadths, the latter ornamented toward the bottom with violet buttons and rows of stitching, below which they form plaits. The front breadth forms an inverted plait or two box plaits.

The empire jacket has a large shoulder collar, or pelerine, bordered with stitching and ornamented with buttons. Larger buttons, like those on the skirt, ornament the front of the jacket.

The collar is of cloth and velvet, the cloth part, also the pockets and cuffs are embroidered with soutache.

The other costume is of gray plaid wool. The short skirt is made with stitched plaits at the sides and is encircled at the bottom with two bias brands of the material.

The blouse is made with plaits and the collar is of blue velvet, the ends passing through slits cut in the box plait; the neck of the blouse is also trimmed with galloon. The sleeves are finished with cuffs trimmed to correspond. The girdle is of the blue velvet.

Thanksgiving Dinner for Plain Family.

Grandmother Outlines Feast Worthy of the Day in Whose Honor It Will Be Served.

For the benefit of the young people of the family and as a study of the times that are past, living only in the memory of our grandparents, a house mother who has been interested in reviewing history with the school girls in her immediate circle has planned this dinner to be served on Thanksgiving day.

A beloved grandmother outlined this feast, the mother assisted by "the girls" carried out the details. A sure-enough country turkey was ordered in the summer from a man who promised to give this particular bird extra care. It is to be stuffed with oysters, chestnuts and a chain of tiny sausage put around the neck. The table is to have a centerpiece of fall vegetables, with candles in brass holders and unshaded. First clam broth is to be served, then creamed fish in clam shells baked in the shell after the manner of the Pilgrim fathers; the turkey follows with squash, Irish and sweet potatoes, celery, cranberry jelly, Damson plum preserves, cucumber pickles, thin slices of brown and white bread, coffee with the meal and all the vegetables placed on the table at once. No place cards and no salad, the dessert is to be pumpkin and apple pie, cheese, fruit, nuts and raisins with cider. If grandmother's health permits she is going to make her delicious pound cake for which she was famous 50 years ago. This repast is to be strictly "en-famile;" the maid is to have the day, and "the girls" are going to dress in costumes such as were in vogue 60 years ago. Grandmother is renewing her youth, and everyone is going to have a "beautiful" time.

A Quilting Bee for Thanksgiving.

There is to be no football game this year, and a lot of young misses were considering how best to spend the holiday afternoon when a thoughtful mother stepped in and sent these deliciously mysterious invitations:

"Will Mistress Penelope Brown appear at the domicile of Mistress Patience Jones at early candle light on the Thanks-day afternoon? Will she please attire her dainty form in sober garb, with 'kerchief and cap of white? Will she also place her thimble and a pair of scissors in her reticule?

"The village youth will assemble with their lanterns to see that each maiden is returned to her home in safety."

Unbeknown to the girls, the hostess has arranged with each special swain to present himself at the hour of eight in the costume of colonial cavalier, with a lantern. In the meantime the girls have had a fine time making downy comforts out of silkaline and cheesecloth for the children's ward of a hospital. After the arrival of the men there is to be a chafing dish supper served, each girl preparing a dish assisted by her particular chef. Here is what they are to have: Creamed oysters, cheese sandwiches, fruit salad in chrysanthemum cases, individual mince pies, hot spiced cider, nuts and fruit.

Exactly at ten each man is to get and light his lantern and escort "Miss Penelope," or whoever it may be, to her "domicile."

Menagerie.

I heard a party of young people and some grown ups having the most hilarious time the other night, finally my curiosity got the best of me, and I went to see what could be the occasion of such spontaneous mirth, and found they were playing "Menagerie," which certainly was a new one to me. Each person was given the name of an animal, a circle was formed with a person in the middle, who was "it;" he called the name of the animal a person represented three times, and if the one called did not respond by saying the name once, he or she had to take the middle and catch the next victim. It sounds simple, but just try it. Here is a list of the animals we had in our "show:"

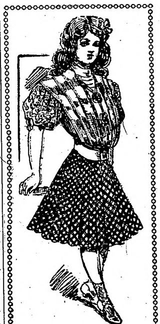
Horse, cat, bear, donkey, bison, muskrat, leopard, camel, elephant, alligator, snake, pig, mouse, opossum, rhinoceros, hippopotamus, sheep, tiger, monkey, frog, toad, squirrel.

MADAME MERRI.

Of Velvet and Cloth.

Pretty frock for little girl from 12 to 14 years old. The skirt is of blue and white checked velvet, made with plaits, which are stitched down as far as the row of stitching which encircles the bottom.

The blouse is of light blue cloth covered with a sort of triple bertha, the front edge finished with checked velvet like the skirt. The rest of the cloth, ornamented with knots of ribbon to match and the little tucked guimpe, or chemisette, is of white linen.



The short puffed sleeves are of lace with the bluer ribbon, which is knotted on the outside. The belt is of soft leather.

The Johnson's are on top this year, in the official swim.

It is awaful qiet now days about the reduction of rail'road rates and the abolshing of passes. We wonder if we will hear any more about this for nearly two years.

"Love one another" is a good old proverb that would be good for the people of Red Lake county at the present. Why not ge togeather, have a big love feast and and settle all difficulty by locating the county seat at St. Hilaire? Why not? it's in the center.—St.Hilare Spetator.

Why not?

If the settlers of these Eleven township are going into a county seat scrap, it seems to us it would be better to get up a petition to divide the county and set off the east end and form a new County. Locate the county seat in the center and work to build up our own country, instead of fighting among ourselves to raise the price of corner lots in either Red Lake of Thief River Falls.

There was a debate at Rhoda Wednesday evenin on the question, "Resolved, that it is best remove the county seat to Thief River Falls" We did not learn how they made out but suppose they left off about where they commenced, It seems to us that it would be better to get up a red hot discussion on the subject of "which hen is the mother of the chicken, the one that lays the egg, or the one that hatches it?" This is more of an interesting subject to us than the removel of the county seat.

He Was A Socilist.

There is two irishmen in Duluth who came to this country about the same time and settled in the same town in the east. The entire population was Democratic and of course they were soon convinced by their friends that it was the only party to belong to. In the course of a few years they both moved West, and not long ago they met on the streets of this city. After renewing aquaintance and talking over the olden days they began to speak on political questions.

"I suppose your as good a democrat as ever Pat?" asked Mike.

"No I am not" replied Pat.

"What party do you belong to now?"

"Oh I'm a Socilist," responded Pat.

"A Socialist! You believe in every body dividing property do you?"

"You bet I do!"

"If you own two houses, you would divide them with your neighbor?"

"That's the idea,"said Pat.

"And if you had two horses you give one away?"

"You're right again" replied Pat.

"And if you owned two goats you world give one away?" continued Mike.

"Ha? Wat's that? No. Sir! I've got two goats myself"! answer Pat, quickly.—Caught On The Run, In Duluth News Tribune.

STORY OF THE FLOOD.

THERE ARE MANY AND VARIED VERSIONS OF THE DELUGE.

The Great Event Is Chronicled Not Only In the Talmud and Koran, but In the Legends of Almost Every Race That Ever Lived on Earth.

One of the most powerful and vivid descriptive portions of the book of Genesis is that devoted to the wonderful story of the deluge. Together with the accounts of Adam's fall, the slaying of Abel and the turning of Lot's wife into a pillar of salt, every one remembers from childhood how Noah was warned of the doom impending over the children of men and how he constructed a huge ark in which he did live, himself and his family and two of every beast of the field and fowl of the air, for the space of 190 days, or until the waters subsided and the dry land appeared. But the Biblical recital of this terrible visitation of divine wrath is by no means the only one. In fact, the most skeptically inclined must believe that something of the sort actually occurred long ago, for it has been perpetuated not only in the Talmud and Koran, but in the legends of almost every nation and race that ever lived on the face of the earth, including the Chinese, the ancient Aztecs of Mexico, the Indian tribes of North and South America and even the savages of Africa.

The story, of course, varies materially in the multitudinous traditions, but the gist of it remains substantially the same—namely, that the earth was once visited by a great flood in which nearly every living thing was overwhelmed and lost. Thus in the Koran we read that Noah constructed the ark with divine assistance and was railed at for his pains by the wicked. When the time prescribed for the punishment of mankind arrived, water was seen to flow from the burning oven of Noah's wife, and immediately all the veins and arteries of the earth broke and spurted out water.

Noah was then admonished in these words: "Take and bring into the ark two couples of every kind of animal, male and female, with all your family, except him who has been condemned by your mouth, and receive the faithful and even the unbelieving, but few only will enter." The Koran also says that the ark was built in two years and that it contained three stories, the upper one for the birds, the middle one for the men and the provisions and the hold for the beasts. Canaan, the son of Ham, refused to be saved. Therefore Noah cursed him, and his posterity became black and were enslaved. The Persians assert that Ham incurred his father's malediction as well. When six months had passed the ark rested on the top of Mount Djondi (Ararat), after having made the circuit of the world. Tabari says that two sorts of animals left the ark which had not entered it—the pig and the cat. Concerning the latter we have this interesting piece of information: When the rats began to make trouble the voyagers complained to Noah. Whereupon the patriarch "passed his hand down the back of the lion, who sneezed, and the cat leaped out of its nose. And the cat ate the rats."

According to the Talmud, Noah and his family and one pair of each kind of beast were to be saved in the ark, but of every clean beast seven were to enter in. The rhinoceros, however, had to be left out, for the simple but sufficient reason that its neck alone was three miles long. Nevertheless all the rabbinic writers agree that the rhinoceros survived the flood; hence it is reasonable to suppose that the huge beast was taken in tow by a rope attached to its horn. Some authorities likewise declare that Noah extended his hospitality to another outsider in the shape of Og, the giant, who climbed on the roof of the ark and received his daily food through a hole bored in the side of the vessel.

Ararat has been known under this name for 3,000 years, and an Armenian writer declares that an entire country was so called after Aral the Fair. an

All the News.

A wise editor says: "A man told us the other day that we did not publish all the things that happened. We should say not. In the first place, there is somebody else depending on us for a living. If we printed all that happens we would soon be with the angels. In order to please the people we must print only the nice things said of them and leave the rest to gossip. Yet it's a fact we don't publish all the news. If we did wouldn't it make spicy reading? But it would be for one week only; the next week you would read our obituary. All the news is all right when it's about the other fellow."

Japanese "Silent" Music.

A curious ceremony is performed in Japan by the court musicians at certain Shinto festivals. Both stringed and wind-instruments are used; but it is held that no sound should be allowed to fall upon unworthy ears, and, as some of the ears present might be unworthy, all the motions of playing are gone through by the musicians; but not a single sound is heard. This strange custom dates back many generations, but since the advent of civilization has rapidly lost favor.

The Bloom on Fruit.

How many boys and girls know why plums, grapes and other fruits of that kind have bloom on them? Of course you know that the bloom is the whitish coating that a mere touch will rub off, leaving the dark skin of the fruit in view. This is a provision of nature for the protection and preservation of the fruit. It prevents dampness from accumulating on it and thus keeps it from decaying.

Luxury In Bottles.

One of the many little signs of the growing luxury of the times is to be seen in the drug stores nowadays where there is kept in stock a supply of bottles for the ordinary run of household remedies with cut glass stoppers and the names of the drugs either ground on the glass or having a regular druggist's label of gilt on a white ground. These bottles are fairly expensive, for ones of pint size cost about a dollar; and from that figure they run down to 50 cents. It is another sign of the times that one of the regular labels kept in stock on these bottles is "peroxide."—New York Press.

Modest Oyama.

Self depreciation seems to be a common virtue of military heroes in Japan. In his parting address to his officers on the breaking up of the Manchurian army Marshal Oyama says, "That I, in spite of my defective ability, have been enabled to avoid any signal failure must be primarily ascribed to the loyalty and fidelity of the officers and soldiers under my command." Surely modesty could go no farther.

The House of Commons.

It was customary at one time when any important measure was under discussion to call the names of all members of the house of commons; with a view to securing a full attendance. Although a motion has been made for it, however, a call of the house has not been known since 1836, and consequently the custom has fallen into desuetude.

Now is the time to start the matter of building a boat to take the cream down the river should be started The Red Lake River Transportatian Co. is being organized and all that is necessary to do now is to raise the funds to build the first boat This will be an easier matter than it was last summer as there is a large number of people that are ready to take hold of the matter and push it along that did not take any part in it last year.

The anual meeting for the election of Directors is to be held on the 2nd Monday in January at which time any change can be made in the board of directors, that the share holders desire to make, so if there is a member on that board of eleven that is not satisfactory to the share holders they have an opportunity to elect some other share holder to take his place.

Now let us take hold and all pull together and we will have at least one new boat ready to start to do hawling when the ice goes out in the spring, and if we do not make an effort we can not accomplish anything, and ~~there~~ will be no boats running on the rivar next year. The people up here must have a boat to dispose of their cream or build a creamery, and it seems to have been satisfactory to the farmers the way they delt last year with the Thief River Falls creamery, but you can't get your cream down there without a boat.

The Rainy Day.

A well known artist recently received a letter from a chap who has regularly made it a practice to borrow money of him. In this letter the chap who is always in financial difficulties surprised his correspondent by saying:

"This time I have decided to reverse the usual order of things, and, instead of borrowing from you, I inclose herewith $50, which I am going to ask that your will lay aside for me for a rainy day."

But the artist couldn't find any remittance in the letter. He searched for it on the floor, under the table—in fact everywhere he thought he might have dropped it. Then quite accidentally he turned over the sheet on which the letter was written and discovered this postscript:

"I've just looked out of the window and find it's raining like the very deuce!"—Collier's.

The Small Mouthed Bass.

The small mouthed bass fully deserves his reputation for being vigorous and gamy from infancy. He is extremely pugnacious by nature and has fighting tactics peculiarly his own which for strength, activity and craft are unequaled. I once took a bass four inches long on a spoon hook, the bowl of which was more than two inches long. This bass does not hesitate to tackle that terror of all other fish—the fierce and voracious pickerel! With his first dorsal fin rigidly set up, he lays off some ten or twenty feet and then makes a rapid dash right into and under the "long face," forcing him to clear out at once or ripping him so badly that he is hors de combat. The fact has been established that bass introduced into a pond containing pickerel will ultimately destroy the latter. The same fate awaits other fish, including trout.—Outing.

Wind Superstitions.

The Finns of Norway long entertained a traditional belief in the power of controlling the winds by a small rope with three knots tied in it. This popular superstition gave rise to the curious industry of making and selling these wind controlling ropes with magical knots to mariners and fishermen. It was believed that by unloosing the first knot a favorable breeze was secured, the second raised a strong gale and if the third knot was untied it would prove the prelude to a tempest. According to Ranulph Higden, the witches of the Isle of Man had a similar ancient practice of selling winds to sailors.

Apt.

Douglas Jerrold had a way of putting pat names to things. One of his remarks is given by George Hodder in "Manners of My Time." Jerrold was at a party one night where a doctor, who was tall and thin almost to emaciation, had for a partner a lady who was short and square in build. Turning to a bystander, he remarked, "There is a mile dancing with a milestone."

When Labor Did Not Tell.

A home missionary who visited Sing Sing prison took occasion to have a heart to heart talk with one of the convicts.

"Don't you know, my friend," said he, "that crime never brings success? It is only achieved by hard labor."

"I did six months of it at a stretch once, and I didn't come out no richer than I went in."

He Was Spurned.

"Believe me," said old Gotrox, "although I'm an old bachelor I'm sure I could learn to be a good husband. You know, a man is never too old to learn."

"Nor too old to yearn, perhaps," replied Miss Peclis; "also I'm sorry to say you're not too old to spurn."—Philadelphia Press.

Always Something Lacking.

Love is like a waltz. It never quite fulfills all one expects of it. Either the man's lead is too fast or too slow, his hold too light or too loose, he stumbles over your gown or steps on your feet, and if everything else is right it is the wrong man.—Life

For Its Vocabulary's Sake.

"Indirectly, more forcibly sometimes than directly," said a senator, "a man may be accused."

"Thus a good woman of Cincinnati called her cook one morning and said: "'Mary, come and take the parrot out of the bedroom at once. The master has lost his collar button.'"

On the Fangs of the Yellow Saw

(The Weird Tale of a Shipwreck)

BY CUTCLIFFE HYNE

(Copyright, 1906, by Joseph B. Bowles.)

It happened when I was 18; and my life had not been passed in still places; but although my years now number four-score and one, the wreck of that unknown Indiaman is the clearest thing in memory to-day.

It was the chief boatman who saw her first. He was patrolling on duty along the cliffs, and a rocket spurting up from the gloom beneath showed him a vessel hard jammed on some of the mid-teeth of the Yellow Saw. Being powerless to aid her by himself, he forthwith carried the report to my father, his superior officer.

Picking up his men as he passed the signal station, my father led on along the cliff, we staggering after him as best we might through the stinging, shrieking darkness, bearing with us ropes, rockets, hawsers, blocks, and what not, we got at last to the cliff-head.

Out of the seething, howling cauldron below, there glared up a flare, as sailors call it—a handful of tow steeped in turpentine, and streaming with dirty yellow flame.

The tearing breath of the gale consumed it in a moment, but we saw a couple of men making a shift to light a larger beacon, and soon a pile of tar-barrels and old junk began to blaze and sputter from the deck of the Indiaman, and lit up all clearly. She was a full-rigged ship of 1,100 or 1,200 tons burden, and sorely mauled. All around was creaming surf and green curling waves, though occasionally the glint of the flames fell on some grim yellow fang of the Saw, and reminded us that others of those venomous rocks were every minute eating deeper and deeper into her sheathing and timbers. It was a weird sight and an awful one.

She could not last long, and her people had evidently come to this conclusion—those of them who were left, that is, for their numbers had thinned woefully during those last dreadful hours. The launch was the only boat the sweeping seas had left them, and when the breaking day once more lit up our view, they were preparing to get her into the water. There was a steep cleft in the rock a little further westward down the coast. They had seen it, and were evidently going to attempt a landing through it.

We, who knew the place, saw the act with new horror. The cleft was guarded by reefs that no craft could hope to float over, and both backwash and undertow were strong enough to drown a seal.

But on what followed I cannot bear to dwell though the few seconds in which that salt drama was played out to the finish seemed to drag themselves out into hours. The heavy boat got into the water, partly by human effort, partly by aid from the cruel sea itself; and its helpless freight embarked. Then she sank into a deep trough out of sight, and when the next sea swept up, no two planks of her were holding together. She had been ground to staves and splinters upon the reef.

A few human atoms here and there dotted the boil of waters, but one by one the hungry fingers of the sea drew them quickly down, and not a soul of that launch's crew escaped.

And now comes the really weird part of my yarn.

As we wound our way amongst the hummocks one of the men who had been on ahead came running back.

"They hain't all left her," he cried out excitedly. "There's a man perched in the mizzen-top!"

Helter-skelter we all struck out, striding over the bowlders, leaning up against the gale, and in another minute saw this survivor for ourselves. He was there, surely enough, and to all outward appearance in no wise dismayed by his situation. He was sitting in the top, with his legs spread out, and his back up against the lower masthead, leisurely eating some bread and meat. On seeing us he stopped for a moment with a morsel in midair, and then went unconcernedly on with his meal.

My father ordered us to get all ready for firing another rocket. His keen seaman's eye had noted that there was likely to be another lull in the gale directly, and he was determined to make the most of it.

Presently the squall gave signs of blowing itself out, and in due time the lull came, and away went our rocket. It fell across the deck of the wreck, close to the main rigging.

In a second the man in the mizzen-top had jumped out on a topmast backstay and slid down to the channels. Running cleverly along the streaming decks he laid hold of the line, and in less than half a minute was back again in his old perch, hauling it in hand over fist with sturdy good will. All his nonchalance was gone now. He saw a good chance of being saved, and was making use of it to the full.

At last he came to the end of the thin line, and making fast the hawser and tail-block which came up to his hand, signaled to us "All ready." In a minute more he was on the cliff-head amongst us.

"A providential escape, sir," observed my father.

"Narrow, certainly," returned the stranger.

"Narrow, also," said my father. "You alone are saved out of I know not how many who were alive at this time yesterday."

"A hundred and forty-three, all told, what with the crew and ourselves. Yes, they're all gone except your humble servant, poor beggars! Yes, gone, poor things."

"You don't seem very grateful for your escape, sir," remarked my father, a trifle sharply.

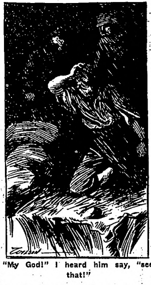
The stranger, who had been staring at the wreck, turned to him with a curious smile.

"Dry land has a deuced pleasant feeling about it at times. But there are other things—"

He did not finish the sentence. He had turned to seaward again, and stood on the extreme brink of the cliff, with hands pressed against the sides of his head, and body crouched and twisted.

"My God!" I heard him say. "See that! There she is alive, and I thought her a battered, sea-washed corpse."

My eyes followed his glance down towards the wreck. A door of the deck house on the poop was in the act of being closed from within, and as it drew to I clearly saw the flutter of a woman's dress. That was the reason of the stranger's agitation. There was some one left behind.



"My God!" I heard him say, "see that!"

"Nobody interferes here," I heard him saying. "I thought her to have gone off in the launch. Now that she lives, no one has more right to be at her side than I, and whilst I live no one shall stand between us."

"Are you her husband?" my father asked.

"Oh, yes, if you like," replied the man; "or uncle, or father, or anything else that pleases you. Good-by."

He reached the top, swung himself on deck by a backstay, as before, and strode off towards the deck house door where the woman had disappeared.

He passed inside and seemed to stay there an age. Was he never going to come out again? Heavens! did not the man know the crazy fabric might dissolve like a sandpit at any moment beneath his feet!

Finally the door of the deck house opened and the pair of them appeared. The woman seemed to be holding back; the man persuaded her, dragging her. Against his strength she could do nothing, and ratline by ratline he carried her up into the mizzen-top, set her down and cleared away the rope's end which had jammed the tail-block. We on the cliff had remanned the hauling lines, and directly it was clear ran the breeches buoy up to them.

Moments were precious. The sea was full of planks, boiling and popping amongst the foam. Every second they were being added to. The mainmast had lurched overboard, ripping a great gap from the deck in its fall. The Indiaman was breaking up fast. Any wave might send the remaining mast after its fellows.

That those on board knew of this we could tell by their gestures; but yet they loitered. He seemed trying to persuade her to do something from which she withheld. We could see him make some proposition and then point to the breeches buoy, which would convey both of them to safety. But again and again she shook her head.

We were standing by the whip ready to heave them shorewards at a moment's notice, and we could see the man point this out. But his companion held to her resolve, and he was evidently determined not to leave her. He waved his hand to us in farewell, shouted something which the gale carried hopelessly away, and then, turning to the woman, kissed her passionately on the lips and then he clasped her tightly in his strong arms.

The mizzen mast swayed over with heavy, sickly slowness, heeled down till the grating of the top was almost perpendicular and then plunged in the dark green cavern of a combing sea.

When it came up again its human freight had disappeared.

The Indiaman's name we never learned, nor the woman's, nor that of the man whom we first saw in the mizzen-top. What their tale was, whether innocent or guilty, how their fate was ruled, whether by themselves or by others; and why they preferred to drown together I never learned.

When Turkey Reigns as Royal Sacrifice.

In Antiquity and American Lineage the Bird Takes Precedence in Western Continent.

When Thanksgiving day comes and families gather around the feast of which the turkey reigns as royal sacrifice, it is the hour to win opinion regarding the American national bird.

Long has the eagle soared and screamed and flapped its wings, but no day of regard has been put in its honor in the calendar.

When it comes to antiquity and a true American lineage the turkey takes precedence. Patriotic societies are finding this out, and committees are considering the advisability of making a place for the bird among national emblems. The eagle is a cosmopolitan, the bird of Jove; the turkey—genus meleagris—belongs to the western continent.

The sacrifice on the altar of thanksgiving is a species distinct from winged and feathered fowl of a distant relationship found in Europe. Like the American Indian, it has aboriginal traits, and inspired by the spirit of the west and an intense love for freedom, refuses the confining restraints of civilization.

The American turkey was among the strange birds discovered by the Spaniards when they invaded Mexico. Oviedo describes it about 1527 as domesticated among the christianized Indians of New Spain (Mexico), and being the bird reserved for festivals. Gay describes the gallopavo sylvestris—the wild turkey of New England—as the wonder of the pilgrim fathers, and from all this data it will be seen that the turkey has a claim to national tribute.

Virginia and Missouri historians write of turkey fowls as peculiar to their wooded hills, but Rhode Island has laid an official claim to the best bred stock that goes abroad. Little Rhody bases its traditions on the customs of the Narragansett Indians, a tribe which once ruled the entire New England area, but became extinct during King Philip's war.

The Narragansetts treasured the turkey as a sacred bird after their days the Niantics took the matter up both for the cause of religion and for the comfort of their stomachs and thus preserved the species from extinction and brought the Rhode Island fame high on the marts that cater to feasts and festivals.

The Rhode Island turkey lives in the hills, feasts on insects and herbs best calculated to make it delectable to epicures and has become desired from the Atlantic to the Pacific. The white turkey comes from the confines of the state and for some years the presidential Thanksgiving dinner has been presided over by an immense bird of the New England stock.

As the Indian and the native customs even of Mistress Anne Hutchinson and Roger Williams are forgotten by latter day Rhode Island sons and daughters, so the turkey of that peculiar breed is passing away. Reports from the state agricultural stations give dire statistics of fatal disease among the turkeys and the vanishing from the land.

In this year Missouri, Indiana and Wisconsin are banner turkey states. The uncut timber and rough ground are good roving places, and the deadly microbe has not found its way to slaughter the innocents.

White with iris-tinted feathers, bronze reflecting the shades of their distant relatives the peafowls, dark hues with rainbow tints and brilliant red dew laps and head ornaments, strolling along the roads in dignified flocks, perching gracefully on fence rails and sounding the piercing call—thus they have been seen in any country byway before the November knell was sounded.

Johnny's Good Time.

"Well, Johnny, did you have a good time Thanksgiving?"

"A good time? Well, I should think I did. Ma had to sit up with me for the next three nights."

Thanksgiving Day the Oldest of Our Holidays.

First Enjoined as Religious as Well as Civic Obligation, the Spirit of the Season Remains.

It is a season of gladsome traditions. Far away as are our lives from those of the little band of colonists of Massachusetts Bay who reverently established a day of thanksgiving for mercies which to us seem no more than the commonplaces of a meagre existence, the spirit of the occasion survives.

Through all the vicissitudes of our national development, Thanksgiving day has been preserved as peculiarly the New England memorial. For generations it had a sectional observance and a limited significance. It was not until the white heat of the civil war fused our people of all sections into a nation homogeneous, that the New England Thanksgiving was made that of the whole country.

Since the first proclamation by the president, calling for the observance of a day of thanks for the preservation of the union of the states, the custom has been maintained; the generation of to-day knows it in this character alone.

This is the oldest of our holidays. In the early times of sectarian intolerance, when church and state were joined in the rule of Massachusetts, there was no Christmas under the law. Observance of the natal day of the Prince of Peace was discouraged, if not absolutely prohibited, by harsh enactments. But the recognition of the day of thanksgiving was enjoined as a religious as well as a civic obligation.

All this is changed in the growth of our people, our commonwealth, our nation, to the stature which we see to-day. Our whole people unite in the giving of thanks; and if the religious element is given less prominence in the forms with which the day is observed, in the hearts of all there is a no less reverent gratitude for the benefactions with which the Power which rules the universe has crowned the life of people and of individuals in this happy age.

We must be glad, every one of us, that we live to-day. The condition of humanity is not perfect; there are cruel exceptions to universal human felicity; but the advance has not only been great but steady and full of marvelous promise for the race. And as for the immediate present, we have only to compare existing conditions of physical comfort, of intellectual improvement, of moral and social uplifting, with those enjoyed by our predecessors, to feel a wave of congratulation surge over our hearts.

Personally, many of us may feel that fortune, or providence, has dealt harshly with us during the past year. There have been disappointments, perhaps grievous afflictions, whose pain is not yet dulled. Let such summon up the resources of the faith that sustained the men of the first Thanksgiving days, who felt as well as believed that "whom the Lord loveth, them he chasteneth;" and let all look forward straight into the future where the sun shines with a glory and a gracious warmth unknown to the race of mankind at any period before this favored century.

Thanksgiving Verse.

Let us with a gladsome mind
Praise the Lord, for he is kind.
For his mercies shall endure—
Ever faithful, ever sure.
—Milton.

O favors every year made new!
O gifts with rain and sunshine sent!
The bounty overruns our due,
The fullness shames our discontent.
—Whittier.

I praise thee while my days go on;
I love thee while my days go on;
Through dark and dearth, through fire and frost,
With emptied arms and treasure lost,
I thank thee while my days go on.
—Mrs. Browning.

Lord, for the erring thought
Not into evil wrought;
Lord, for the wicked will
Betrayed and baffled still;
For the heart from itself kept,
Our thanksgiving accept.
—W. D. Howells.

AWFUL SUFFERING.

From Dreadful Pains from Wound on Foot—System All Run Down—Miraculous Cure by Cuticura.

"Words canont speak highly enough for the Cuticura Remedies. I am now seventy-two years of age. My system had been all run down. My blood was so bad that blood poisoning had set in. I had several doctors attending me, so finally I went to the hospital where I was laid up for two months. My foot and ankle were almost beyond recognition. Dark blood flowed out of wounds in many places and I was so disheartened that I thought surely my last chance was slowly leaving me. As the foot did not improve, you can readily imagine how I felt. I was simply disgusted and tired of life. I stood this pain, which was dreadful, for six months, and during this time I was not able to wear a shoe and not able to work. Some one spoke to me about Cuticura. The consequences were I bought a set of the Cuticura Remedies of one of my friends who was a druggist, and the praise that I gave after the second application is beyond description; it seemed a miracle for the Cuticura Remedies took effect immediately. I washed the foot with the Cuticura Soap before applying the Ointment and I took the Resolvent at the same time. After two weeks' treatment my foot was healed completely. People who had seen my foot during my illness and who have seen it since the cure, can hardly believe their own eyes. Robert Schoenhauer, Newburg, N. Y., August 21, 1905."

WHEN CUBA WAS FOR SALE.

Offered to France for $6,000,000 in time of Louis Philippe.

It is not generally known that Cuba very nearly became a French Colony in the reign of Louis Philippe, for Spain, being without means of raising money, Queen Christina offered some of the principal Spanish colonies for sale.

Secret negotiations were carried on at the Tulleries between Senor Campuzano, the Spanish ambassador; Senor Aguado, the banker; Prince de Talleyrand, and King Louis Philippe, and the first article of the treaty, by which Spain was to sell Cuba to France for 30,000,000 francs, or $6,000,000, was quickly agreed to.

But the second article, relating to Porto Rico and the Philippines, broke off the negotiations, for Spain asked $2,000,000, whereas France would offer only $1,400,000, King Louis Philippe asserting that the acquisition of the Philippines might very easily involve him in a war with England.

It is significant that in those days neigther party paid the slightest attention to what the United States might think; but the Spaniards must now regret that they did not accept for it would have saved them many millions in the ensuing 60 years.—London Sketch.

Four-Footed Thieves.

In Winchester, England, a grocer began to miss money from his till, and set his wife to watch. After two weeks the wife was not able to detect the thief, though money was stolen almost every day. There were two clerks in the store, and the grocer finally called them thieves and discharged them.

When two others had taken their places the money continued to disappear, and the case was given to the police. An officer who hid under the counter solved the problem. He found bits of paper representing about $50 that the mice had made nests of. They had entered the till through a hole in the back and taken the bills one at a time.

The two clerks who had been discharged for dishonesty brought suit for damages, and the other day the grocer was compelled to pay them $300 each.

American Invasion of Canada.

Within the last 12 years there has grown up in western Canada an American population estimated at 250,000 farmers, growers of wheat, corn and flax, settlers not only imbued with the American spirit of enterprise but devoted to American institutions. During last year the immigration from this country to Canada, according to official figures, was more than 52,000 persons. To-day in the northwest, outside of Winnipeg and some of the older towns, the dwellers who have crossed the border from the United States outnumber the native Canadians, in places, two to one.—Appleton's Magazine.

Fine Wireless Station.

A Berlin writer states that a wireless signal station is now in course of erection at Norddeich for the German government postal authorities, which will have an effective radius of 932 miles, equal to the distance from Naples to St. Petersburg. The station consists of four iron towers, 213 feet high.

CHINA THE LAND OF DUCKS.

Staple Article of Food for Residents of Celestial Empire.

There are more ducks in China than in all the rest of the world. China, literally, is white with these birds, and day and night the country resounds with their metallic and scornful voices.

Children herd ducks on every road, on every pond, on every farm, on every lake, on every river. There is no back yard without its duck house. There is no boat, little or big, without its duck quarters.

Even in the cities of China ducks abound. They dodge between the coolies' legs. They flit squawking out of the way of the horses. Their indignant quack will not unseldom drown the roar of urban commerce.

All over the land there are great duck hatching establishments, many of them of a capacity huge enough to produce 50,000 young ducks every year.

The Chinese duck is extremely tender and delicate—the best tame duck for eating in the world. Duck among the Chinese is the staple delicacy. It is salted and smoked like ham or beef, and duck eggs are eaten as chicken eggs are in America.

KAISER'S DIGNITY WAS HURT.

Offended by Shoes of One of His Consular Agents.

The enthusiasm of the good Norwegians for Queen Alexandra is the more remarkable as, in the matter of crowned heads, they have some excuse for affecting to be blase.

The German emperor, of course, is a regular frequenter of the fjords, but he allows no liberties to be taken with his sacred person. On one occasion when the Hohenzollern anchored off a little town, the German consular agent, as in duty bound, went aboard to pay his respects; but, not being possessed of a uniform, it did not appear to him necessary to appear at midday in the comic opera kit of evening dress on board the vessel.

He therefore presented himself in an attire that compromised the official correctness of frock coat by brown boots. His majesty, however, resented the informality, called the attention of the consul general at Bergen to the solecism, and announced his intention of ceasing to honor the place with any further visit.—London P. INSOMNIA CURED

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills Restored Wrecked Nerves to Normal Condition and Good Health Followed.

The sufferer from sleeplessness too often resorts to habit-forming drugs in order to secure the coveted rest. But sleep obtained by the use of opiates is not refreshing and the benefit is but temporary at best.

Mrs. H. A. Fletcher, of 59 Blodget street, Manchester, N. H., is living evidence of the truth of this statement. She says: "I received a shock of an apoplectic character. It was so severe that the sight of my right eye was affected, causing me to see objects double. I was confined to my bed about four weeks, at one time being told by the doctor that I could not get well. When I could leave my bed I was in such a nervous state that I could not sleep at night. I would get up and sit on a chair until completely tired out and then go back to bed and sleep from exhaustion.

"I had been under the doctor's care for six weeks when my sister, Mrs. Loveland, of Everett, persuaded me to try Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People. I began taking the pills with the result that I soon experienced relief. One night soon after taking them I lay awake only a short time and the next night I rested well. From that time I slept well every night and soon got well and strong. I have recommended Dr. Williams' Pink Pills a number of times, and my niece has taken them for weak nerves and poor blood and found them very beneficial."

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills have cured many severe nervous troubles, headache, neuralgia and sciatica as well as diseases of the blood such as anæmia, rheumatism, pale and sallow complexions and many forms of weakness. All druggists sell Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, or they will be sent by mail postpaid, on receipt of price, 50 cents per box, six boxes for $2.50, by the Dr. Williams Medicine Company, Schenectady, N. Y.

POULTRY AND BEES

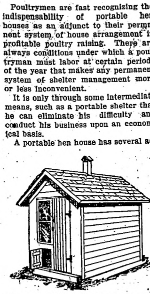
A PORTABLE HEN HOUSE.

The Advantages of Such a Building Over the Stationary Structure.

Poultrymen are fast recognizing the indispensability of portable hen houses as an adjunct to their permanent system of house arrangement in profitable poultry raising. There are always conditions under which a poultryman must labor at certain periods of the year that makes any permanent system of shelter management more or less inconvenient.

It is only through some intermediate means, such as a portable shelter that he can eliminate his difficulty and conduct his business upon an economical basis.

A portable hen house has several advantages that makes it not only practical, but indispensable in profitable poultry keeping. It frequently happens during the breeding season that one desires to separate a few individuals from the flock for special breeding purposes.



Movable Poultry House on Runners.

A portable hen house furnishes means through which the desired purpose can be accomplished economically and conveniently. The house can be moved a short distance from the main plant, a small area fenced in, and the flock maintained without much additional expense.

There are always occasions in poultry raising when it becomes advisable to promote best results to keep broods of young poultry separated during the growing season. In fact if the broods can be distantly separated they will do much better.

In such instances it is a matter of great convenience to resort to small shelters for carrying on the work. I have many times found it advisable to separate my young growing stock into colonies of a hundred and house them a few rod apart.

To separate the fowls successfully I used colony houses, and find that I am not only able to conduct the work more satisfactory, but far more economically as well. Especially with young growing stock the colony method of growing the stock is the most profitable.

There are various designs of colony houses that can be made portable and answer the purpose in every way. The one here illustrated is an excellent one and has many strong advantages over many that are in use to-day upon some farms. The house is 5x6½ with five posts.

The building is mounted upon runners that serves as a means of transportation. The runners are 5x5-inch pine with an iron strip nailed to the bottom of the runner to save them from wearing, also to keep the woodwork up as much as possible from the moisture. The main frame work is made of two by fours.

The siding is pine ship-lapping of good quality. Shingles were used for roofing. In the front is a door for entering the building when necessary and for cleaning out. A system of ventilation is used that supplies fresh air on the same principle as used in cow-stables. This is essential as the shelter is small and tight.

This portable shelter, says Prairie Farmer, has been in use for several years and is one of the most popular portable hen houses in use upon several Michigan poultry farms.

The Bone Mill.

It is surprising that every farmer that has fowls does not have a bone mill. Bones cannot be utilized without being ground, and they contain a large amount of food ingredients. Bones contain much lime and this is very necessary to the fowl dropping a large number of eggs during the year. Bones also contain phosphorus and this is not found in as large quantities in some other foods. The green bones also contain considerable of nitrogen. Altogether the use of bones ground or cut is to be recommended. Moreover, large quantities of the bones are constantly going to waste. Why throw away bones which may be of such value in the poultry establishment? Their manurial value is also made available after they have been used by the fowls.

The Well-Bred Fowl.

Beak for beak well bred poultry eat no more than mongrels. Pound for pound the meat breeds cost no more to raise, but less. Bird for bird they cost more; they are worth the difference. Egg for egg the laying breeds and strains cost no more to feed but double, triple or quadruple the profits derived from scrubs. Everything is in favor of pure breeds.

Make your poultry run the gauntlet at once. Do not let any fowl into the hen house this winter unless it gives promise of immediate or future profit.

Much "Dead" Mail Matter.

More than 11,000,000 pieces of mail went astray in the Uunited States last year because they were not directed even well enough for the experts to decipher the names and addresses. Millions of this immense total went to the Dead Letter Office, where a lot of it was opened, the addresses of the writers ascertained and the letters or packages returned. But in a great many cases the writer's address is never found and the letter is really "dead."

A Well-Known Remedy.

One of the oldest, safest and most favorably known remedies in the world to-day is Brandreth's Pills—a blood purifier and laxative. Being purely vegetable, they can be used by old or young with perfect safety, and while other remedies require increased doses and finally cease acting altogether, with Brandreth's Pills the same dose always has the same effect, no matter how long they are taken. One or two pills taken each night for a while is the best thing known for any one troubled with constipation, indigestion, dyspepsia or any trouble arising from impurity of the blood.

Brandreth's Pills have been in use for over a century, and are for sale everywhere, plain or sugar-coated.

Treatment of Habitual Criminals.

The New Zealand minister for justice has introduced the habitual criminals and offenders bill, which provides that where a person has been twice convicted of a criminal assault or four times of wounding, robbery or burglary, he may be regarded as an habitual criminal and at the expiration of his sentence detained in a reformatory.

After six convictions for vagrancy a man may be treated in the same way. Discharge from the reformatory will be secured only on the recommendation of the court, while the detained offenders will be made to work and wages will be placed to their credit or toward the support of their dependents.

Women at Strenuous Tasks.

On the western coast of the United States, at Monterey, Cal., Mrs. Fish keeps the lamps lighted in the Point Pinas lighthouse. On the eastern coast, at South Portland, Me., Mrs. Gordon earns her living by working as a deep-sea diver. Sprinkled over the country between these two women are thousands of other members of the female sex who deserve to be enrolled as auxiliaries to Mr. Kipling's corps of "Unafraid Gentlemen." And then, from the woman in Utah who is sheriff and hangs murderers, to the woman in Chicago who bosses a gang of Italian street cleaners, he tells the role of women who are engaged in strenuous occupations in the United States. Wherever man has tried to wrest a living from unwilling nature there woman has also left the impress of her daring exploits.—Technical World.

COFFEE IMPORTERS

Publish a Book About Coffee.

There has been much discussion as to Coffee and Postum lately, so much in fact that some of the coffee importers and roasters have taken to type to promote the sale of their wares and check if possible the rapid growth of the use of Postum Food Coffee.

In the coffee importers' book a chapter is headed "Coffee as a Medicine," and advocates its use as such.

Here is an admission of the truth, most important to all interested.

Every physician knows, and every thoughtful person should know, that habitual use of any "medicine" of the drug-stimulant type of coffee or whisky quickly causes irritation of the tissues and organs stimulated and finally sets up disease in the great majority of cases if persisted in. It may show in any one of the many organs of the body and in the great majority of cases can be directly traced to coffee in a most unmistakable way by leaving off the active irritant—coffee—and using Postum Food Coffee for a matter of ten days. If the result is relief from nervous trouble, dyspepsia, bowel complaint, heart failure, weak eyes, or any other malady set up by a poisoned nervous system, you have your answer with the accuracy of a demonstration in mathematics.

"There's a reason" for Postum.

FEARFUL PAINS

SUGGESTIONS HOW WOMEN MAY FIND RELIEF.

While no woman is entirely free from periodical suffering, it does not seem to be the plan of nature that women should suffer so severely. This is a severe strain on a woman's vitality. When pain exists something is wrong which should be set right or it will lead to a serious derangement of the whole female organism.

Thousands of women have testified in grateful letters to Mrs. Pinkham that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound overcomes woman's special pains and irregularities.

It provides a safe and sure way of escape from distressing and dangerous weaknesses and diseases.

The two following letters tell so convincingly what Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound will do for women, they cannot fail to bring hope to thousands of sufferers.

Miss Nellie Holmes, of 540 N. Division Street, Buffalo, N. Y., writes:

Dear Mrs. Pinkham:—

"Your medicine is indeed an ideal medicine for women. I suffered misery for years with painful periods, headaches, and bearing-down pains. I consulted two different physicians but failed to get any relief. A friend from the east advised me to try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. I did so, and no longer suffer as I did before. My periods are natural; every ache and pain is gone, and my general health is much improved. I advise all women who suffer to take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound."

Mrs. Tillie Hart, of Larimore, N. D., writes:

Dear Mrs. Pinkham:—

"I might have been spared many months of suffering and pain had I only known of the efficacy of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound sooner; for I have tried so many remedies without help.

"I dreaded the approach of every month, as it meant so much pain and suffering for me, but after I had used the Compound two months I became regular and natural and am now perfectly well and free from pain. I am very grateful for what Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has done for me."

Such testimony should be accepted by all women as convincing evidence that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound stands without a peer as a remedy for all the distressing ills of women.

The success of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound rests upon the well-earned gratitude of American women.

When women are troubled with pain or irregularities, displacements or ulceration of the organs, that bearing-down feeling, inflammation, backache, bloating (or flatulency), general debility, indigestion and nervous prostration, or are beset with such symptoms as dizziness, faintness, lassitude, excitability, irritability, nervousness, sleeplessness, melancholy, they should remember there is one tried and true remedy. Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound at once removes such troubles. Refuse to buy any other medicine, for you need the best.

Don't hesitate to write to Mrs. Pinkham if there is anything about your sickness you do not understand. She will treat you with kindness and her advice is free. No woman ever regretted writing her and she has helped thousands. Address Lynn, Mass.

Success in the Gulf Coast Country

Here is an example of what YOU could do.

$500 Realized from One Acre of Onions.

Mr. Geo. Hoffman, of Kingsville, Texas, planted early this Spring five acres in carrots. In March, he sold his carrots to Denny & Co., of Chicago, for $5 per crate. His net returns on five acres of carrots were $320 per acre. One acre planted in onions yielded more than 20,000 pounds, for which he received 2 1-2 cents a pound. Result: $500 per acre.

Mr. Hoffman is not a myth, but a real, live, up-to-date farmer; write him at Kingsville and he will tell more about his wonderful success.

Such results may seem beyond belief, but they are facts. You might do as well in the Gulf Coast Country. It has a mild climate; tender vegetables can be raised almost every month in the year. The farmer there puts his crop on the market in Winter and early Spring, when the price is highest. By irrigation he insures himself against crop failure; rivers or artesian wells give a bountiful supply of water. Two and sometimes three crops a year are raised and twenty acres there will make as much as fifty acres in other places.

Don't you think this is better than a one-crop country where your success depends on uncertain weather with irregular rainfall? Come to the Gulf Coast Country and win success as others have done.

Now the land is cheap and you can get it on easy terms. Twenty acres will cost you about $500. The cost of clearing it is about $5 an acre. The cost of water for irrigation varies. You may want an artesian well of your own; you may get water from some river; or you may get it from your neighbor. But the cost is not great and those who have tried it have netted from the first crop, a sum which has paid all expenses, and left a good surplus.

It is not only a good place to make money, but it is also a good place for a home. The sunny, mild winters are delightful and the summers are tempered by the cool breezes from the Gulf.

THE INVENTIONS OF HAWKINS

THE GASOWASHINE.

The name and the precise location of the hotel are immaterial. If you happened to be there that night you know very nearly all that occurred; if not, you have in all probability never heard of it, for I understand that the proprietors took every precaution against publicity.

Let it suffce, then, that the hotel is a prominent and a fashionable one, located somewhere between the Battery and the Bronx, and that Hawkins and I sat at a table in the restaurant on that particular evening and feasted.

The inventor had called at my office and dragged me away to dine with him, rather to my surprise, for I believed him to be somewhere in the south with his wife.

You see, after a certain explosion in their home, a month or two of reconstruction had been necessary; and I opine that Mrs. Hawkins had thought best to remove her husband while the repairs were being made. If he had been there it is dollars to doughnuts he would have invented a new bricklayer or a novel plastering machine and wrecked the whole place anew.

It was in reply to my query as to his presence in New York that Hawkins said:

"Well, you know, Griggs, it impressed me as very foolish from the first—that idea of my wife's of getting out of town while the place was being rebuilt."

"She may have had her reasons, Hawkins," I suggested.

"Possibly, although I fail to see what they were. When a man's own home is being built—or rebuilt—his place is on the spot, to see that everything is done right. Now, how, for instance, could I, away down in Georgia, know that those workmen were properly fitting up my new workshop?"

"Workshop?" I gasped. "Are you having another one built?"

"Certainly," snapped Hawkins. "I didn't mention it to Mrs. Hawkins, for she seems foolishly set against my continuing my scientific labors. But I fixed it on the sly with the architect. It's all finished now—has been for a week and over—power and everything else."

"Hawkins," I said, sadly, "are you going right on with your experimenting?"

"Of course I am," replied the inventor, rather warmly. "It's altogether beyond your poor little brain, Griggs, but scientific work is the very breath of my life! I can't be happy without it; I'm not going to try. Why, all those seven weeks down south one idea simply roared in my head. I had to come home and perfect it—and I did. I've been in New York nearly three weeks, working on it," concluded Hawkins, complacently.

"And you've managed to perfect another accursed—" I began.

Just then I ceased speaking and watched Hawkins. His ears had pricked up like a horse's. I, too, listened and heard what seemed to be a heavy automobile outdoors; at any rate, it was the characteristic chugg-chugg-chugg of a touring car, and nowadays a commonplace sound enough.

But it affected Hawkins deeply. An ecstatic smile overspread his face, and he drew in his breath with a long, happy:

"A-a-a-a-a-ah!"

"Been buying a new auto, Hawkins?" I asked, carelessly.

"Auto be hanged!" replied the inventor, energetically. "Do you imagine that an automobile is making that noise? I guess not! That's my new invention, Griggs!"

"What!" I cried. "Here? In this hotel?"

"Right here in this hotel—right under our feet," said Hawkins, proudly. "That noise comes from the Hawkins Gasowashine!"

I think I stared open-mouthed at Hawkins for a moment or two; I know that I leaned back and shook with as violent mirth as might be permitted in so solemnly proper a resort.

"Well, does that impress you as particularly humorous?" demanded Hawkins, angrily.

"Hawkins," I said, "why don't you start in and write nonsense verse? There's a fortune waiting for you?"

"I must say, Griggs,' rejoined the inventor, sourly, "that you have very little comprehension of the advertising value of a good name. Who under the sun would ever remember the 'Hawkins Gosolene Washing Machine,' if they saw it in a magazine? But—'The Gasowashine!'"

"Of course. It's the one perfect contrivance for washing and drying dishes; and let me tell you the basic principle of that machine breathes genius, if I do say it. Why, Griggs, just think! You can pile in 300 or 400 dishes, simply start the motor, and then sit down while the clean, dry dishes are piled neatly on the table."

"And they're really using it here?" It—it works?" I asked, wonderingly.

"Well, they're going to use it," said Hawkins, rising. "I have consented to allow them to try my model. It arrived here just before we did."

"Hawkins, have we been sitting right over that thing all this time?"

"Don't try to be comic, Griggs," said the inventor, briskly, "I'm going down to see who's fooling with that motor. It should not have been touched, although I must say it's a satisfaction to sit in a first-class place like this and hear my own machinery running. Are you coming?"

I will admit that I was curious about the contrivance. I followed Hawkins through the crowded dining-room to a door in the back.

Then, dodging a dozen hurrying waiters, we made our way down an incline into the kitchen and through that apartment, past steam tables and ranges and pots and kettles and other paraphernalia of the cuisine.

At the farther end of the room stood a massive affair of oak. It looked, as nearly as it resembled any other thing on earth, like a piano box; but on each side, near the top, was a huge fly-wheel, the two being apparently fastened to the ends of an axle.

For the rest of the mechanism, it was all concealed. I rightly surmised the monstrosity to be the Gasowashine.

The fly-wheels were revolving slowly, and this seemed to irritate Hawkins.

"Good evening, Mr. Macdougal," he said, to a puzzled looking gentleman, who stood eyeing the affair. "Mr. Griggs, Mr. Macdougal, the manager. So some one started it, did he?"

"One of the 'buses happened to touch it, and it started itself," replied the manager, gazing on the contrivance. "It's quite safe to have about, is it not, Mr. Hawkins?"

"Safe? Certainly it is safe."

"I mean to say, it won't injure the dishes?" the gentleman continued, with a doubtful smile. "You see, we have filled the main compartment with hot water, as you directed, and put in 300 pieces of our best crockery."

"Mr. Macdougal," said Hawkins, icily, "if one dish is broken, I'll pay for it, and make you a present of the machine, if you say so. If you do not wish to make the test, doubtless there are other hotel men in New York who will appreciate its advantages."

"Not at all, not at all,' cried the manager. "I appreciate fully—"

"All right,' said Hawkins, shortly. "Now, the dishes are all in, are they? Very well. I'll explain the thing to Mr. Griggs and then start it. You see, Griggs, the dishes are in here."

He tapped the side of the big box.

"When I turn on the power, they are thoroughly rubbed and soused by my automatic scrubbers—a separate patent, by the way—and then they reach this spot."

He rapped upon the box near the end.

"Here they are forced against a continuous dish-towel, which runs across rollers all the time. Just think of it! Sixty yards of dish-towel, rolling over and over and over! After that—but you shall see how they look after that. I'll start her."

He twisted a valve of some sort. The chugg-chugging became more pronounced, and the fly-wheels revolved with very perceptibly increased rapidity.

From somewhere inside the thing emanated a gentle rattle and swish of crockery and suds. Hawkins stood back and regarded it proudly.

"There's another great point about the Gasowashine, too," he said. "As you see, it's too heavy to shove from place to place. What do we do?"

"Leave it where it is," I hazarded.

"Not at all. We simply invert it! The whole business is watertight. Every door fits so closely that it's impossible for a drop to escape. Now, if I wished to move it to the other end of this room, I should simply turn the Gasowashine upside down, allow it to rest upon the fly-wheels, which keep on revolving, of course, and steer it wherever I desired."

"And so you might go a little better and put on a saddle and a steering-wheel and take a ride across the park while you were washing dishes?" I suggested, somewhat to the manager's amusement.

"Possibly you think it's impracticable?" Hawkins rapped out. "Perhaps you don't realize that there's a five-horsepower motor running that?"

"There, there, Hawkins," I said, soothingly, "if you say that washy-washine is good for a trans-kitchen on a transcontinental tour, I'll take your word for it."

"You don't have to!" cried the inventor, wrathfully. "I demonstrate it. See here, you!"

To this a corpulent French gentleman in white, who had just flipped an omelette to a platter and sent it upon its way. "Come and give me a hand here. Just help turn this thing over."

"Comme cela?" inquired the astonished cook, making pantomime with his hands.

"Exactly. That's right. Catch hold of the other side and don't let go until I tell you."

The cook complied. Really, the Gasowashine seemed to turn more easily than might have been expected from its huge bulk.

A strain or two, a puffed command from Hawkins, an ominous sliding about of hidden dishes, and the machine lurched forward, poised a moment on its edge and turned quite gently, so that the wheels approached the floor.

"Now, easy! Easy!" cried Hawkins. "Don't let the wheels down until I tell you, and don't let go till I give the word. Now down! Down! Gently."

The cook seemed to be feeling for a new grip.

"Here! What are you doing?" cried the inventor. "Don't touch any of those handles."

"It is that I seek a place for ze hand," murmured the cook apologetically.

"Well, find it and let her down. Got your grip?"

"Aha! I have eet!" announced the Frenchman, clutching one of the brass knobs.

"All right. Down!"

Down went the Gasowashine. And a very small fraction of one second later things began to happen.

Each of Hawkins' inventions possesses a latent devil. You have only to brush against the handle or the valve or the string, or whatever it may be that connects him with the other world and the demon awakes.

In this case, the cook must have pinched the tail of the devil of the Gasowashine, for he sprang into action with a rush.

"Is it to release the hold?" asked the Frenchman as the wheels touched the floor.

"No, not till I—hey!" cried Hawkins, starting back in amazement.

"Our—dishes!" ejaculated the manager breathlessly.

The Gasowashine and the cook were traveling across the kitchen together. The Frenchman, with remarkable presence of mind, was behind the machine and dragging back with all his might; but as well could he have hauled to a standstill the locomotive of the Empire State Express.

The Gasowashine, puffing heavily as any racing auto, had plans of its own and was accompanying them to the accompaniment of a simply appalling rattle of crockery.

"Don't let go! Don't let go!" cried Hawkins. "Keep hold, my man!"

"I do! I do! Mais, mon Dieu!" called the Frenchman jerkily.

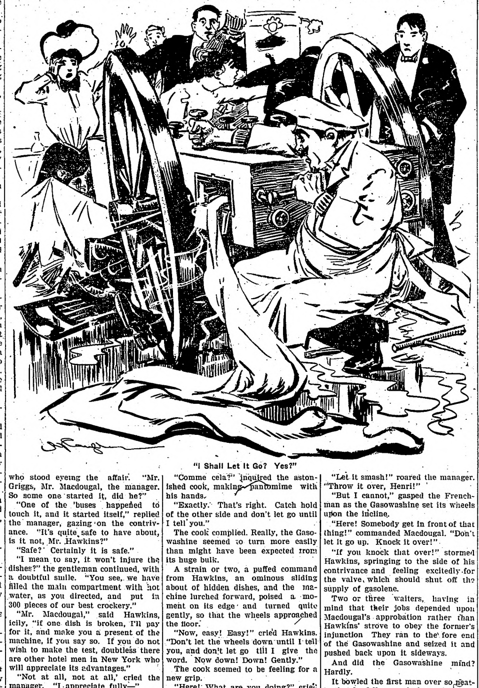
"But, Mr. Hawkins," gasped the manager as we hurried after, 'what will become of our china?"

"The devil take your china!" snapped Hawkins, forgetful of his recent guarantee. "If they run into the wall, it'll break the motor!"

They were not going to run into the wall. The Gasowashine approached the side of the apartment, swerved easily to the left, and made for the incline which led to the hotel dining room.

"Good gracious!" screamed the manager. "Not up there! Knock that thing over on its side, Henri!"

"Don't you do it, Henri," cried Hawkins. "If you do it'll smash."



"I Shall Let It Go? Yes?"

"Let it smash!" roared the manager. "Throw it over, Henri!"

"But I cannot," gasped the Frenchman as the Gasowashine set its wheels upon the incline.

"Here! Somebody get in front of that thing!" commanded Macdougal. "Don't let it go up. Knock it over!"

"If you knock that over!" stormed Hawkins, springing to the side of his contrivance and feeling excitedly for the valve, which should shut off the supply of gasolene.

Two or three waiters, having in mind that their jobs depended upon Macdougal's approbation rather than Hawkins' strove to obey the former's injunction They ran to the fore end of the Gasowashine and seized it and pushed back upon it sideways.

And did the Gasowashine mind? Hardly.

It bowled the first man over so neatly that he fell squarely beneath one of his fellows, who was descending loaded with dishes. It rolled one of its wheels across the toes of the next antagonist, and drew from him a shriek which sent people in the dining room to their feet.

After that coup, the Gasowashine had things all its own way on the incline.

The French cook still maintained his hold. Hawkins pranced along side and fumbled feverishly, first with that knob then with this little wheel.

Several of them he managed to move, but to no good end. Whether excitement had confused Hawkins' mind on the details of his invention I cannot say; but certainly, far from controlling the Gasowashine, he made matters worse.

The machine puffed harder, the wheels revolved more rapidly, and the whole affair climbed steadily toward the dining room, dragging the tenacious cook along the incline in a sitting posture.

Thus was made the first public appearance of the Gasowashine, to the utter amazement of some hundred diners.

Bursting through the doors, it snorted for a moment, and seemed to be considering the long rows of tables before it. Several waiters, gasping with astonishment at the uncouth apparition, ran to check its progress.

That seemed to stir the Gasowashine anew. It emitted a sharp puff of rage and plunged headlong forward.

Hawkins pranced along by its side, half turning as he ran to cry:

"Now, just—make way, ladies and gentlemen, please. It's not at all dangerous. Just make way."

They made way, without losing any undue amount of time.

One or two women fainted unostentatiously.

Most of them, men and women, scrambled away from the main aisle, which seemed to have been selected by the Gasowashine for its further performances.

"Hawkins," I panted when I had managed to regain breath, "why don't you knock the cursed thing over?"

"There, there, there, Griggs," sizzled Hawkins, dashing the perspiration from his eyes. "I've almost control of it now. I'll just shut off this—"

He gave a powerful twist at one of the handles.

"That'll—" he began.

"Pouff!" roared the Gasowashine, rearing up and lunging wildly from side to side for a moment.

Then it started down the aisle in earnest. Bang! Bang! Bang! echoed from the crockery inside. Puff! Puff! Puff! said the motor, driving its hardest.

"Ceil!" wailed the cook. "I shall let it go? Yes?"

"No!" shouted Hawkins, running behind the unhappy man. "In just a second it'll—"

It did, although not perhaps what Hawkins expected.

I saw a little door in the side of the infernal machine flip open. I perceived a shower of finely subdivided crockery hanging over the cook for a moment.

Then the bits of china and some two or three gallons of greasy water descended upon the Frenchman and the door flipped to once more. The Gasowashine had dislodged the cook and was free to pursue its wanderings unhindered.

And certainly it made the most of the opportunity.

For three or four yards it bumped along, ramming its top-heavy nose into the carpet and seeming to become more and more enraged at its slow progress. Then it paused a moment and pawed at the floor with its whizzing wheels.

I fancied that I could upset it then, and sprang forward to do so, regardless of Hawkins.

I might have known better. I was within perhaps ten feet of the Gasowashine when another door, this time a smaller one toward the front, squeaked for a moment and then flew open. Simultaneously a bolt of something white shot forth and made for my head.

Regardless of appearances, I dropped flat to the floor and wriggled out of the danger zone.

When I arose, I realized what new disaster had taken place. It was the 60 yards of dish-towel this time!

Presumably a roller had smashed and released the thing, at any rate, there it was, yard after yard of it, trailing after the Gasowashine as it thumped energetically toward the street door.

And that was not the worst. The end of the toweling entwined itself about one of the dining tables and held there. The table went over, collided with the next and emptied that, too.

Then the next followed and the next, each new crash echoed by the frightened squeals of the guests, now lined up against the opposite walls.

The tenth table, with its load of crockery and glassware, had been sent to destruction before Macdougal, the manager, finally gained the dining room. Tears rose to his eyes as he made a rapid survey of the havoc, but he kept his wits and shouted:

"Knock it over! Somebody knock it over!" A big military-looking man in evening clothes sprang forward. I offered a prayer for him and held my breath. He rushed to the Gasowashine, seized it with his mighty arms, and gave a shove.

"M-m-m-mister," quavered Hawkins, wriggling from under one of the tables, "don't do that! The g-g-g-gasolene tank!"

But it was done. With a dull crash, the only perfect machine for washing and drying dishes fell to its side. The big man smiled at it.

And then—well, then a sheet of flame seemed to envelope the unfortunate. A heavy boom shook the apartment, the big glass door splintered musically and fell inward, the lights in that end of the room were extinguished.

Then followed the screams of the terrified guests, the patter of numberless fragments of crockery and countless drops of filthy dishwater as they reached the floor. And then the big man picked himself up some 20 feet from the spot where he had dared the wrath of the Gasowashine.

And Hawkins standing majestically in the wreck of a table, with one foot in a salad bowl and the other oozing nesselrode pudding, while an unbroken stream of mayonnaise dressing meandered down the back of his coat—Hawkins, standing thus, shook his fist at the big man and, above the turmoil shouted at him:

"I told you so!"

Such was the fate of the first, last and only Gasowashine:

Bellboys, clerks and waiters pelted with hand grenades its smoldering remains and squirted chemical fire extinguishers upun it; but the Gasowashine's day was done. Its turbulent spirit had passed to another sphere.

Later, when some measure of order had been restored to the dining room, when the door had been boarded up and the inquisitive police satisfied and the street crowd dispersed; when a sympathetic waiter had partially cleansed Hawkins, and that gentleman had suggested that we might as well depart, he received a peremptory invitation to call upon the proprietor in his private office.

The proprietor was a calm, cold man. He viewed Hawkins with an inscrutable stare for some time before he spoke.

"I hardly know, Mr. Hawkins," he said at last, "whom to blame for this."

"Well, I know! That hulking lummox who knocked over my—"

"At any rate, the machine was yours. I fear you will have to pay for the damage."

"I will, eh?" blustered Hawkins. "Well, I told your man Macdougal that if one dish was broken I'd pay for it. Here's the dollar for the dish! Come, Griggs."

"Um-um. So you refuse to settle?" smiled the proprietor.

"Absolutely and positively!" declared Hawkins.

"Well, I think that, pending a suit for damages, I can have you held on a charge of disorderly conduct," mused the calm man. "Mr. Macdougal, will you kindly call an officer?"

Hawkins wilted at that. His checkbook came forth, and the string of figures he was compelled to write made my heart bleed.

When he had exchanged the slip for a receipt, Hawkins and I made for the side door and slunk out into the night.

The Gasowashine, I presumed, or such combustible fragments as remained, found an inglorious grave next day in the ranges of the same kitchen which had witnessed the start of its short little life.

DANGER IN THE COLD BATH.

Should Never Be Indulged In Unless the Person Is in Good Physical Condition.

In a suggestive article on bathing, a doctor gives some hints which should never be forgotten and which are of interest to those who have long known them as well as to those who have not. Here are a few excerpts:

Should one feel chilled after a cold bath and the following hard rub, that person must realize that cold baths are bad.

There is really no way I can suggest that a person can tell whether or not cold baths are good for him, except by the glow and bodily warmth that should follow. I think if the finger nails look blue and the body is covered with gooseflesh after the bath that it is too strenuous, says the physician.

As to the method of taking baths, I believe that a needle, shower or bath sponge is best, for few are strong enough to stand a plunge, and as to sitting or lying in a tub of cold water, I would say unhesitatingly that it is unwise, for it takes too much animal heat and results in a loss of energy that is unnecessary. Frequently those who are not strong enough to take a cold water bath as it comes from the spigot will find it immensely beneficial when a bag of salt is placed in the tub; or by taking the chill off with the addition of warm water, the bath will still be practically cold, for the temperature will be much cooler than the body.

Cold baths should, as a rule, be taken only in the morning directly after rising, unless a person is very warm and wants a cold tub on a hot day or in a few cases of extreme fatigue. When very warm I would suggest that the individual wait until the perspiration is entirely dried on the body before getting into the water. For the shock to the nerves and the rapidity with which the blood is drawn to the surface of the skin by the cold is not good. This same rule applies to salt water bathing. And many persons who jump into the surf when very warm and covered with persiration often wonder why they feel nauseated after they have been in a few minutes.

One of the most refreshing baths I have ever taken is a combination of the cupful of cider vinegar and cold water. If it is not too cold I would suggest lying in it from five to ten minutes when particularly fatigued, for the reaction is remarkable.

There is this to be guarded against in cold water bathing, that this is not to be done unless the person is physically fit, never when the thought of the cold on the body brings a shiver or if one feels weak. At such times a bath in tepid water will be far better and will have no bad results, as the cold one might.

A Soothing Remedy.

There is something infinitely soothing in massage for tired eyes when rightly applied. All that is needed is the power of using the fingers with infinite gentleness. The lids are closed and the "masseur" using two or three fingers passes them above and below the lashes from the inner corner of the eye outward. The movement may be followed by strokes over each eyebrow.

A quick bath is the best remedy in the world for lassitude, a fit of the blues, headaches and a lot of minor ills. There is nothing so conducive to a clear skin, for by stimulating all the pores all over the body loss of the impurities of the skin are sent out through the more sensitive glands of the face. Beauty baths of milk and rose petals and all that sort of thing is the greatest kind of flubdub talk.

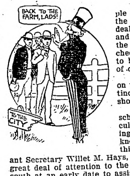
Interesting Gossip from the Nation's Capital—Problem of Keeping Young People in the Country Receiving Attention of the Agricultural Department—Cause of Durand's Retirement.



BACK TO THE FARM, LADS!
TO THE CITY

WASHINGTON.—How to keep the young people of America on the farm is a question to which the department of agriculture is devoting a great deal of attention and effort. Secretary Wilson and his lieutenants believe the future welfare of the nation demands that the drift cityward be checked and that what America needs mainly is to become imbued with an appreciation and love of country life.

President Roosevelt himself entertains views on this subject that are well known and that distinctly favor the idea that the love of country life should be cultivated among the American people.

The establishment of the agricultural high school in a number of states is a movement calculated to help along the great design of teaching the country boy and country girl a better knowledge of the farm and farming and through this a better appreciation of country life. Assistant Secretary Willet M. Hays, of the department of agriculture, is devoting a great deal of attention to the agricultural high school. He will probably go south at an early date to assist in the establishment of such high schools in Georgia and look into the work done in other states, especially Alabama.

Georgia is about to establish 11 of these schools, and an official of the department has been advising state officials as to locating them and securing suitable lands, adapted for experiment purposes, where the schools are to be established.

Alabama has nine agricultural high schools, Minnesota two, North Dakota one, Wisconsin two and South Dakota one. Prfo. Hays believes the movement is destined to spread rapidly until every state in which the average price of farm lands is high will have a number of agricultural high schools, one on an average for each congressional district.

PLAN ADOPTED BY THE DEPARTMENT.

HOW YOU SEE THIS IS HOW YOU DO IT, ETC.

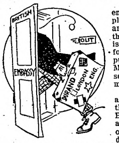
The plan on which the department of agriculture is working is the establishment of a complete educational ladder on which the farmer boy may climb from the rural school up to the agricultural high school and then on up to the agricultural college.

The first step in the ladder, according to Prof. Hays, is the consolidated rural school; the second the agricultural high school, and the third and last the state agricultural college. Hence the department is friendly to the movement through the United States for consolidated rural schools, intended to take the place of the district schools. One consolidated rural school can be established in a township and the children can be taken to it. They would be housed in better buildings and given better teachers and better instruction than under the system of one small school for each school district of a few square miles. There are about 300 consolidated rural schools in the United States, but the tendency is for the number to increase, thus supplanting the old-time district school and making the "little red schoolhouse" a relic of the past.

Prof. Hays' idea is that in the old system of education which is now largely in force through the country, the texts, the teachers and the ideals are all centered in some city profession, and the boy or girl who is to be a farmer has little place therein. The school system has thus been a potent influence in leading the American people from the farm to the city.

What is wanted is an educational system that will build up the country life of the American people. On the one hand there are the city primary graded schools, city high schools and colleges and universities. It is the purpose of the department of agriculture to build parallel with them a system in which education in agricultural pursuits, coupled with a good general education, may be obtained.

DURAND TOO SLOW FOR ROOT DIPLOMACY.



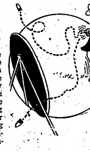
That Sir Mortimer Durand is too slow for the energetic diplomacy of Secretary Root is the explanation given for the retirement of the British ambassador. The friction came about, it is said, through the failure of the Briton to cooperate satisfactorily with the secretary in the negotiations for a treaty with Canada which would end all disputes between that country and the United States. Mr. Root has made this subject his hobby and seems determined to leave such a treaty as a monument to his administration.

Secretary Root, concluding that his great aspiration could not be realized by having all the negotiations pass through the hands of the British ambassador, "by the circumlocution route," as he termed it, that is, requiring the submission of each step to the British foreign office at London, to be transmitted thence to the Canadian government, proposed that Sir Mortimer obtain the sanction of his government to the suggestion that the Canadians be taken into the negotiations. Sir Mortimer, acceding to the wishes of Secretary Root, sounded the British government and obtained permission to proceed to Canada to see what could be done.

The victory of Secretary Root was most remarkable. He secured for the Canadians what they have been unable to obtain for themselves, direct representation and participation in diplomatic negotiations. Sir Mortimer, under authority obtained from the British foreign office, proceeded to Canada and conferred with Earl Gray, the governor general, Sir Wilfrid Laurier and other Canadian leaders. After explaining the astonishing victory won for the Canadians by Secretary Root, Sir Mortimer had no difficulty in bringing the Canadians to an agreement to appoint a representative.

Secretary Root was elated, but was doomed to disappointment. The Canadian government has not sent a representative to Washington. Whether Sir Mortimer has been held responsible for this is not known. He may not have shown as much interest in Mr. Root's laudable ambition as the secretary of state wished and lack of cooperation may have weakened him here.

CLUBS TO PROMOTE TARGET PRACTICE.



The action of the United Spanish War Veterans in taking up the subject of rifle practice at its recent annual encampment in this city is highly gratifying to the national board for the promotion of rifle practice as a step in the encouragement of rifle practice among civilians.

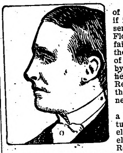
The United Spanish War Veterans now have more than 200 camps. It is proposed to organize civilian rifle clubs in as many of these camps as possible. While ostensibly civilian clubs, these will really be military rifle clubs, for the military rifle of the United States will be used, along with the army revolvers of the standard patterns. The members of this organization are mostly young men who have had training in rifle shooting either in the militia or in the volunteer service during the late war. They propose to keep up their military training, and, as part of that work, will engage in rifle practice.

The movement toward civilian rifle practice, while necessarily of slow growth, is proceeding with sufficient rapidity to gratify those who have it most at heart. Since the organization of the national board and the reörganization of the National Rifle association great strides have been taken in the direction of acquiring a national reserve of marksmen. Congress has encouraged the work by providing national trophies and for annual pistol and rifle matches, and recently increased the militia appropriation so that $500,000 annually is available for militia practice and the acquiring of ranges and shooting galleries.

Civilian rifle practice is expected to do much for the militia. Just as the taste for military training inculcated in boys in high school cadet corps leads many of them to join the militia later, so it is believed that men who learn to shoot as civilians will join the militia because of the additional facilities for practice they will thereby enjoy.

IN THE PUBLIC EYE.

CHURCHILL MAY GO TO SENATE



Winston Churchill's fight for the governorship of New Hampshire may bring him the brilliant, if indirect, reward of a seat in the United States senate. The prospect is held out by the fact that Floyd, the Republican candidate for governor, failed to secure a majority of the votes cast in the election, and that in consequence the duty of electing a governor will have to be performed by the legislature, which convenes in January next. The constitutional candidates are Floyd, Republican, and Jameson, Democrat, and under the laws either of these gentlemen must be the next chief magistrate of the state.

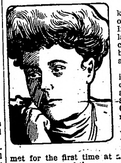
In view of the fact that the Republicans have a strong majority in both branches of the legislature, it might be expected that Floyd would be elected, but there are two kinds of Republicans elected to the house, one known as the Lincoln Republican club Republicans, or "Churchills," and the other as the "regulars."

The next legislature is to elect a United States senator to succeed Hon. Henry E. Burnham, of Manchester, and it is suggested that this office, which is the great dazzling political prize, might be given to the Churchill men, and they in return should join to elect Jameson, the Democratic candidate for governor; a speaker of the house, a secretary of state and a state treasurer.

This, it is argued, would be only an equitable and fair division of the offices, as the value of the senatorship would about balance that of the offices named.

Churchill gave up a naval career to engage in literary work, and by his first novels established himself as one of the leading writers of fiction of the day. He was born in St. Louis in 1871, and after his preliminary schooling entered the United States Naval Academy, being graduated in 1894. He was married the next year to Mabel H. Hall. In 1902, having attained fame by his writings, he entered politics and began a ssuccessful campaign for election to the New Hampshire legislature, having made his home in Cornish, N. H., for several years. He served in the legislature of 1903 and 1905 and was a delegate to the last Republican national convention. He is author of "The Celebrity," "Richard Carvel," "The Crisis," "Mr. Keegan's Elopement" and "The Crossing," and has contributed stories on naval and other subjects to magazines.

CUPID CONQUERS PAULINE MORTON



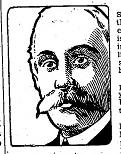
Announcement of the engagement of J. Hopkins Smith, Jr., to Miss Pauline Morton, daughter of Paul Morton, president of the Equitable Life Insurance company and granddaughter of the late Sterling Morton, who was secretary of agriculture during Cleveland's administration, has been made. The Mortons have just returned from an extended trip through Europe.

Mr. Smith, a member of an electric engineering firm and a graduate of Harvard in the class of 1902, is the youngest son of J. Hopkins Smith, a millionaire clubman of New York city. Mr. Smith is an enthusiastic sportsman and won the German emperor's cup in the international yacht regatta at Kiel in 1902.

Miss Morton, who is a very pretty young woman and accomplished, is just 20 years of age, while her fiance is 25. The romance of the young couple began a couple of years ago, when they met for the first time at a White House event, when Miss Morton's father was secretary of the navy. Miss Morton, who is a warm friend of Mrs. Nicholas Longworth, was one of the most popular of debutantes of the official set in Washington. As daughter of the secretary of the navy, she christened the United States steel sailing ship Cumberland at the Charleston navy yard, Boston, in 1904.

Since going to New York to live, Miss Morton has figured prominently in social affairs. She was educated in the fashionable young women's schools of Boston and New York, later spending a year in study at Naples. Miss Morton's only sister was married about four years ago to William Chapman Potter, a mining engineer, who now lives in the City of Mexico.

EMINENT DIVINE BREAKS DOWN



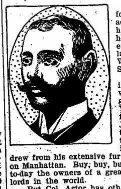
A wreck in mind and body, Rev. Minot J. Savage, until last April pastor of the Church of the Messiah in New York and one of the most conspicuous Unitarian ministers in the world, is now in a private sanitarium near Cleveland and in a serious condition. His friends hope that his life may be spared, but he is so weak and the strain on his mind has been such that it is feared he will not recover.

Dr. Savage is 65 years old and had held the pastorate of the New York church for many years. He became noted as the most forceful Unitarian minister in the country and his reputation extended abroad.

As head of his large church his labors were heavy and a year ago his physicians advised him that, tired in body and mind, he needed a rest. He would not listen to their advice, but last April he found that he could no longer stand the strain of his work and he resigned. He sought rest for his tired nerves in California, where in earlier years he had held pastorates as an orthodox minister. He remained there several weeks, but did not seem to be benefited. He then went to Cleveland.

Dr. Savage started as a Congregationalist, but in a few years joined the Unitarian church, becoming pastor of a church of that denomination in Chicago in 1873. In 1874 he went to the Church of the Unity, in Boston, where he was pastor until 1896. In that time he became widely known. In 1896 he accepted the call to the Church of the Messiah, in Cleveland. Of late years Dr. Savage had become much interested in the study of supernormal phenomena and in the theories of Flammarion and other spiritualists. Many of his congregation were not in accord with him regarding these doctrines, but the harmonious nature of his relations with them was not disturbed.

LATEST DIVERSION OF COL. ASTOR



Col. John Jacob Astor, who provides homes for thousands of his fellow-citizens in New York, accepting in return certain stated sums of money, has developed the fad of erecting magnificent hostelries, lavishly furnished. The 15-story Knickerbocker, opened in New York recently, is the latest addition to his "string," which includes the Waldorf-Astoria, the Belmont, the Astor and the St. Regis.

Col. Astor is a good business man, although it has been said his greatest stroke of business was in having the first John Jacob Astor for a great-grandfather. The building of hotels in New York is in line with the traditions of the Astor family, handed down from its founder. John Jacob Astor, the shrewd Dutchman who tramped through the Michigan forests buying furs, was the first to see the vast possibilities for wealth in the future of New York city. All the money he drew from his extensive fur trade and other enterprises went into real estate on Manhattan. Buy, buy, but never sell, was the motto which makes his heirs to-day the owners of a great portion of the metropolis and the richest landlords in the world.

But Col. Astor has other fads, as he can well afford. Although one of the world's richest men he is content to be a plain American citizen. He is proud of America and her institutions. He proved this by enlisting for the Spanish-American war. He was on Gen. Shafter's staff at the battle of Santiago and worked like a hero. He equipped a battery, which he presented to the United States. The Astor battery won distinction in the Philippines. He is married and has two children.

GOTHAM GOSSIP AND INFORMATION.

News of Interest Gathered by Our New York Correspondent—Aerial Dinner Parties the Latest—Social War of Woman Blamed for Ousting of Fish from Illinois Central.

BALOONS FOR RENT

NEW YORK.—Dinner parties a mile above the city restaurants and hotels are the newest thing in this city, which is always looking for something new. Seeing Chinatown at night may become a tame adventure, for the visitor to New York who really wishes to do things up in style will charter a balloon for a trip which will give him a bird's-eye view of the city.

The Aero Club of America, apparently having decided that ballooning should no longer be the sport of millionaires exclusively, but that the "peepul" also should have a chance to enjoy the pleasurable sensation of falling a mile or two, has decided to allow the general public to charter two balloons at the modest cost of $50 for the larger and $35 for the smaller. The real cost of the trip, however, will be about $75 more in each case, and chartering parties will be given a feeling closely akin to ownership and complete independence by being responsible for the balloons while using them, as well as being allowed to pay all expenses incurred in getting the bag and car back to its starting point. Passengers, moreover, will be allowed to provide parachutes calculated to set off any costume.

With these opportunities for aerial sport brought within the reach of the masses, it is rumored that parties above the clouds will become even more popular than dog or monkey dinners. There will be no noise and no captious critics, and a convenient cloud will serve capitally to cool the wine. It is not believed, however, that in the near future, at least, pedestrians in the city streets will be seriously annoyed by debris thrown over by these aerial diners.

DOWNFALL OF FISH DUE TO SOCIAL WAR.

FISH SOCIAL BOOT

Social aspirations of Mrs. E. H. Harriman and social jealousy on the part of Mrs. Cornelius Vanderbilt and Mrs. John Jacob Astor over the success of Mrs. Stuyvesant Fish are declared to be at the bottom of the ousting of President Fish from the control of the Illinois Central railroad.

For years Mrs. Fish has been an acknowledged leader in the New York 400, and there are stories to the effect that she has at times been arrogant in her sway. Her rule as social sovereign, it is said, has been especially felt by Mrs. Harriman and her position has been envied by other social leaders in her class, notably by Mrs. Vanderbilt and the younger Mrs. Astor.

Through the efforts of these women, goes the story in Wall street, grew up the enmity between their husbands which culminated at the directors' meeting in the open personal charges aimed at President Fish by Harriman's friends on the board. The votes of Vanderbilt and Astor carried the day for Harriman and though they were influenced later than Harriman, it is declared that it was Mrs. Harriman's campaign which she directed at their wives that finally won their votes for her husband.

Banking circles in Wall street show a great deal of ill-feeling over the ousting of Fish, and there is further much apprehension over the probable effect the action will have on the foreign holders of Illinois Central securities. There is much of this stock held in Holland and England.

President J. T. Harahan has announced that he would continue the policy of Mr. Fish so far as the relations of the line with other companies is concerned. He said further that there would be no changes in the operating department of the company.

TO DICTATE LETTERS BY TELEPHONE.

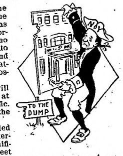
Plans now under way will make it unnecessary for business men to depend upon private stenographers or typewriters. Central typewriting exchanges, to which letters can be dictated over the telephone circuit and returned for signature in a few minutes, are to be established in large office buildings and hotels.

Such a scheme has been made practical by means of the telegraphone, which not only makes a perfect reproduction of the human voice, but also records everything that passes over the ordinary telephone. These records are stored upon a thin steel wire or disc and can be reproduced an indefinite number of times or removed when there is no further use for them.

Each of the central exchanges will have a number of telegraphones and a staff of typewriter experts and trained linguists. When the business man or the guest in a large hotel wishes to dictate he will pick up the receiver of his telephone and ask to be connected with a telegraphone in the exchange. By means of a small switchboard he will have complete control of the machine to which he is dictating in the exchange. If it should be necessary to make any changes in the letter a push button is pressed, which brings a pair of magnets, stronger than those which made the record, into contact with the wire and any part or the whole of the letter is immediately wiped out. In the same records of dictated letters are wiped out as soon as transcribed, so that the machine is always ready for use at any time.

As soon as the dictation is finished the typewriter operator places the telegraphone sounders to his ears and transcribes the records which have been made, returning the letters to the office from which they were dictated. The matter transcribed might be in English, French, German or any other language. It might be legal, scientific or technical, full of difficult words and phrases which would tax even the most highly educated and expert stenographer to take down in shorthand with rapidity and accuracy. When the central typewriting exchanges are established, telegraphones will enable business men to dictate letters at a great speed, in any language and on any subject.

PALACE FRONTS ON FIFTH AVENUE MUST GO.



At least half the grand facades and all the ornamental porches and porticoes of Fifth avenue below Fifty-ninth street will have to be razed as a result of a decision rendered by Justice O'Gorman, of the supreme court, in special term, who declares the millionaire and merchant princes to be nothing more than squatters on the city's land and not even entitled to a claim under the squatter law, which gives title by long undisputed possession.

Corporation Counsel Ellison says that he will insist upon the city's rights in Fifth avenue at once, because the space is needed for traffic. Other streets will be left as they are until the space is actually needed.

The decision of Justice O'Gorman was handed down in the case of the city against the Knickerbocker Trust company, which built its magnificent front of Corinthian architecture many feet over the line of the street. The steps extend 15 feet into the street, and even the columns themselves are outside of the line of the lot on which the building stands.

The first structure affected by the decision is Martin's restaurant, the old Delmonico's, where a French terrace on the Fifth avenue side will have to come out. The Waldorf will have to give up a pretty ornamental garden between the walk and the windows on the Fifth avenue side. Sherry's will have to give up its Parisian cafe, with decorative plants surrounding. B. Altman & Co.'s big store at Thirty-fourth street and Fifth avenue will be asked to chop off its new portico. The Cornelius Vanderbilt residence will have to demolish $40,000 worth of wrought iron fence inclosing the house and gardens. The Whitney residence, at Fifty-seventh street and Fifth avenue, will lose its lawn.

"FELLOW CITIZENS" SAYS PRESIDENT

TELLS PORTO RICANS AT PONCE THE ISLAND SHOULD BE ADMITTED SOON.

Is Warmly Greeted with Cheers and Flowers and Rides in an Automobile to San Juan by the Famous Military Road.

San Juan, Porto Rico, Nov. 22.—President Roosevelt arrived at Ponce Wednesday morning from Colon on board the battleship Louisiana. He was visited on board the vessel by Gov. Winthrop, who extended a welcome to the island. The president at once came ashore and was greeted at the pier by Mayor Oppenheimer, of Ponce, and a delegation of prominent officials and citizens. The town, which was profusely decorated in the president's honor, was crowded with people from the surrounding country eager to greet Mr. Roosevelt.

In spite of the early hour the landing place was crowded with an expectant throng, many of whom had been in their places all night to witness the incoming of the Louisiana. As the president stepped ashore the crowd cheered him crying: "Viva el Presidente."

Cheers and Flowers.

When the greetings were over the president, accompanied by Gov. Winthrop, was driven to the city hall, Mrs. Winthrop and Mrs. Roosevelt following. The president was kept busy acknowledging cheers all along the two-mile line of march from the landing place to the principal plaza of the town. At the entrance to the plaza a hugh arch had been erected, from which little girls threw flowers to both the president and Mrs. Roosevelt as they passed.

Ponce was in gala attire, American colors being interspersed with Spanish flags.

At the city hall an address of welcome was read to the president. He delivered his reply from the balcony of the building, addressing the largest crowd that has ever assembled in Ponce.

The president said in part:

"I shall continue to use every effort to secure citizenship for Porto Rico. I am confident this will come in the end and all that I can personally do to hasten that day I will do. My efforts will be unceasing to help you along the path of true self-government, which must have for its basis a union of order, liberty, justice and honor."

Calls Them Fellow Citizens.

In conclusion the president said:

"I salute you from my heart as fellow citizens."

The reference to citizenship brought out enthusiastic applause from the people.

The presidential party left Ponce at half-past ten, the time set by the schedule, for the run to San Juan over the famous military road. Eleven automobiles conveyed the party. Stops of three minutes each were made at Juana Diez, Coamo and Aibonito. At each place the president was welcomed by the mayor and spoke briefly from his automobile.

Welcomed at San Juan.

Arriving at the original entrance to the city of San Juan, where formerly stood the old city hall and gate, a huge arch had been erected by the city, and here Mayor Todd and the city officials extended their welcome to the president.

He responded in a brief speech and was then escorted by the Porto Rican provisional regiment to the governor's palace. The city was elaborately decorated, every American flag available being used to the best advantage. President Roosevelt was in a happy mood and bowed and waved his hands to the cheering throngs.

He received a particularly warm reception as he passed the Casino, the exclusive Spanish club. President Roosevelt complimented Chief of Police Hamil for the perfect police arrangements.

Sails for Home.

Washington, Nov. 23.—The navy department was advised Thursday that the battleship Louisiana with President Roosevelt aboard, and convoyed by the battleships Washington and Tennessee, sailed from Ponce, Porto Rico, early Thursday for Hampton roads.

GERMAN VESSEL IS BLAMED.

Should Have Heeded Orinoco's Signal, It Is Said.

Cherbourg, Nov. 24.—The preliminary investigation made by the captain of the port into the cause of the collision Wednesday night off this port between the North German Lloyd steamer Kaiser Wilhelm der Grosse and the British royal mail steamer Orinoco seems to establish the fact that the former vessel should have heeded the Orinoco's signal that she was going to starboard of the German ship.

The royal mail line steamer Orinoco, with her passengers on board and under her own steam, sailed Friday for Southampton. The bodies of her three missing sailors have not been recovered.

Paris, Nov. 23.—According to the advices received at the offices here of the North German Lloyd company, the captain of the Kaiser Welhelm der Grosse, damaged in collision with the Orinoco off Cherbourg, November 21, insists that he gave the proper signals and that the Orinoco is to blame for the accident.

PIPE LINE IS ATTACKED

SUIT FILED AGAINST BUCKEYE COMPANY OF OHIO.

Alleged to Be a Part of the Standard Oil Trust and to Make Unfair Charges.

Findlay, O., Nov. 23.—The Buckeye Pipe Line company was made the defendant in a suit filed in the circuit court late Thursday by William L. David, prosecuting attorney of Hancock county, and George H. Phelps, who has just returned from the attorney general's office. The state of Ohio is the plaintiff.

The petition alleges that the Buckeye Pipe Line company is organized under the laws of Ohio with a capital stock of $10,000,000 and is empowered to transport and store petroleum by means of pipes. The petition charges that ever since its organization in 1886 it has been a member of an illegal combination known as the Standard Oil trust. It operates in six counties in northwestern Ohio and charges 20 cents per barrel for the transportation of oil any distance. Such charges, it is said, are only nominal and are imposed to prevent others from availing themselves of such facilities. The charges are alleged to be wholly disproportionate to the services rendered.

It is stated to be the duty of the defendant as a common carrier to afford the public equal facilities for use of its pipe lines and that the charges should not be more than one-eighth of one per cent. Plaintiff prays for an alternative writ of mandamus to issue out of the circuit court and that the defendant provide for the public equal and just facilities and transportation in Ohio and fix a schedule of rates. The petition is signed by Wade H. Ellis, attorney general.

GIANT SWINDLE IS BARED.

Members of Alleged Band of Fake Promoters Nabbed.

Chicago, Nov. 21.—United States post office authorities in Chicago uncovered a million dollar swindle Tuesday—not the paper kind, but real, hard cash—and it may amount to as much more.

The federal grand jury took prompt action and as a result nine alleged tricksters of high finance were arrested and five concerns with high sounding titles came down to earth with a thud. Several more arrests will be made soon.

The officials came upon this amazing fraud through the arrest in Milwaukee of Thomas P. Daniels, said to be the son of a former judge of the New York supreme court, who was operating a group of companies in Milwaukee with Chicago alliances. Daniels was known generally as Thomas D. Cameron.

He confessed to United States District Attorney Butterfield in Milwaukee, and a few hours later warrants were issued for his agents and men in similar lines of business in New York, Chicago and San Francisco.

GROVER CLEVELAND FOR SENATE

May Enter the Race in New Jersey to Succeed Dryden.

Washington, Nov. 24.—The possibility that ex-President Cleveland may be induced to enter the senatorial race in New Jersey is being widely discussed in Washington. While the New Jersey senate is Republican by seven majority on joint ballot, six Republicans have declared their opposition to Senator Dryden for re-election. Of the six four have stated they cannot vote for a Democrat and two are noncommittal.

It is not believed in Washington that Mr. Cleveland could be persuaded to enter the race unless assured of the votes to elect and some of his old friends here declare he might have some scruples about taking a seat secured by Republican votes. Among Democrats and Republicans alike there is a growing sentiment in favor of sending Mr. Cleveland and President Roosevelt both to the senate within the next few years.

SHOT TEACHERS IN REVENGE.

Boy, Refused Permission to Go Hunting, Waylays Instructors.

Punxsutawney, Pa., Nov. 23.—Because his teacher refused to grant him permission to go hunting, James Dougherty, Jr., 16 years old, shot and seriously wounded Prof. J. E. Kohler, principal, and Meade Snyder, his assistant.

Following the afternoon session of school young Dougherty ran to his home, secured a shotgun, and, meeting the teachers on the road from school, demanded that he be given permission to go hunting. The teachers refused again and the boy fired at them. Prof. Snyder received part of the charge in his face, body, and legs, and Prof. Kohler was injured in the legs. Dougherty was arrested.

Murder Ends Honeymoon.

Grand Rapids, Mich., Nov. 23.—After a trivial quarrel with his bride of three months over the purchase of furniture, Delos Highland, a farmer living near Gasnovia, shot and killed her. He then turned the revolver upon himself, killing himself instantly. Highland was 28 years old and his wife 22.

To Hold Panpacific Exposition.

Honolulu, Nov. 24.—The promotion committee has arranged to hold a Panpacific exposition in this city next year.

MAKES PORT AFTER THRILLING VOYAGE

STEAMER FRONTENAC REACHES RACINE, WIS., AFTER WILD NIGHT ON LAKE.

Four Men Perish at Entrance to Holland, Mich., Harbor—Seven Probably Lost in Storm on Lake Erie.

Chicago, Nov. 23.—Driven miles out of its course by the mile-a-minute gale which raged over the lake, the steamship Frontenac of the Graham & Morton line, a small steamer plying between Chicago and St. Joseph, Mich., was buffeted about on the high sea for almost twenty hours, until it was finally driven into the harbor at Racine, Wis., at 7 o'clock Thursday. The steamer was due in St. Joseph on Wednesday evening.

The Frontenac left the Chicago harbor at 11 a. m. Wednesday, carrying a dozen passengers and loaded with merchandise. Before it had been out an hour a high wind arose and an hour later the gale was blowing at the rate of 60 miles an hour. The steamer, unable to continue on its course, was gradually driven northward.

Four Drowned at Holland, Mich.

Grand Rapids, Mich., Nov. 23.—Four men who were caught by Wednesday night's storm on the crib work of the new breakwater at the entrance to Holland harbor on Lake Michigan, were drowned. Desperate attempts were made by the life savers when it was learned that the men were caught, but efforts to reach the pier in time were unavailing.

The old schooner Maria Martin was battered to pieces by the sea and wind at Detroit. The boat broke from its moorings and was pounded to pieces against the abutment of a bridge.

Seven Probably Lost.

Sandusky, O., Nov. 23.—The barge Athens, in tow of the steamer Pratt, went down in Lake Erie in the storm Wednesday night. The captain and six men of the crew were probably drowned. Captain Mackey of Milwaukee was in command of the barge. He has sailed on the lake for 40 years. The Pratt was bound from Escenaba to Buffalo with iron ore. The storm struck the vessel when about 20 miles northeast of Southeast Shoal, west of here.

Soon after the storm struck the vessel the tow line parted. The Pratt was able to ride the storm, but the Athens soon foundered. Captain McPherson of the Pratt says that the sea was running so high that he was unable to render any assistance to the Athens, and the barge went down about 10 o'clock at night. Captain McPherson is sure that Captain Mackey and the members of the crew went down with the vessel. Captain McPherson says the storm was one of the worst that he has ever experienced.

Boat Swamped; Six Drowned.

Toronto, Ont., Nov. 23. — Early Thursday morning the steam barge Resolution, from Erie, Pa., to Toronto sprang a leak in the heavy seas just outside the harbor here and sank. The crew, under the command of Captain Sullivan, put off in two boats. One, containing five people, reached the shore safely, while the second was swamped, her six occupants being drowned.

Steamer Blown Aground.

Detroit, Mich., Nov. 23.—The steel steamer Chauncey Hurlburt, bound for Buffalo, was blown out of her course on Lake Erie Wednesday night by the terrific gale and is aground off Leamington. She is reported to be undamaged and in no danger, although it will be necessary to lighter part of the cargo before the steamer can be released. Her tow is anchored off Colchester undamaged.

Win Battle With Storm.

Marinette, Wis., Nov. 23. — The schooner Ottawa, from Sturgeon Bay, reached here Thursday after a harrowing experience. The sails had been blown away and the crew were exhausted from their battle with the waves.

CARUSO IS FOUND GUILTY

FAMOUS TENOR CONVICTED OF ANNOYING WOMEN.

Judge Imposes Fine of Ten Dollars—Defendant Severely Arraigned by Prosecutor.

New York, Nov. 24.—Enrico Caruso, the famous Italian tenor, Friday was found guilty of annoying women in the Central Park zoological garden. A fine of $10 was imposed. The verdict was rendered by Magistrate Baker in the Yorkville police court after a hearing which extended more than three days.

Former Judge Dittenhoefer, counsel for Caruso, when informed of the verdict, said that an appeal would be taken. The appeal will be heard before justices of the court of special sessions probably within a week.

New York, Nov. 24.—After one of the most bitter arraignments ever heard in a court in this city, the case of Enrico Caruso, the famous Italian tenor, who is charged with annoying women in the monkey house in Central Park, Friday was placed in the hands of Magistrate Baker of the Yorkville police court for final determination. Counsel for Caruso, in a closing argument, which consumed nearly an hour, declared that Caruso was the victim of a police conspiracy and appealed to the court not to blast a great career upon such flimsy evidence as had been produced against the singer. Speaking for the prosecution, Deputy Police Commissioner Mathot characterized Caruso as a man destitute of moral sense.

Mr. Mathot said he was not in court in the interest of the police department nor to defend Policeman Cain. "I am here," said Mr. Mathot, "on behalf of our women, our wives and daughters, to ask you if these panders and sexual perverts shall be permitted to use our public highways and the parks for the prosecution of their beastial performances."

Mr. Mathot said that the reason why Mrs. Hannah Graham had not appeared in court was that she feared to face a crowd of perverts such as commonly attended such a hearing and such a crowd as was then present.

The spectators in the courtroom hissed Mathot at this remark.

The testimony in the case was concluded after Deputy Commissioner Mathot had vainly tried to introduce testimony to show that Caruso had attempted to take liberties with a society woman in whose auto he was riding.

SCHMITZ DENIES CHARGES.

Mayor of San Francisco Lands and Isn't Arrested.

New York, Nov. 24.—Mayor Schmitz of San Francisco, who arrived here Friday on the steamship Patricia, said there was absolutely no truth in the charges made against him and that he will go to San Francisco and court the fullest inquiry. When the Patricia arrived at quarantine, Mr. Schmitz was shown newspapers containing reports of the charges against him in San Francisco. He said:

"There is not a scintilla of truth in the charges. The fact is, it is an attack made against me by my political enemies because I made a strong fight against District Attorney Langdon, who was defeated for governor. His friends are now taking their revenge."

No attempt was made to arrest Mr. Schmitz when he came ashore from the steamer. An automobile was waiting for him and he entered it and left the dock at once, presumably to go to his hotel.

Convicted of Peonage.

Pensacola, Fla., Nov. 24.—The jury in the cases charging W. S. Harlan, of the Jackson Lumber company and C. C. Hilton and S. E. Huggins with conspiracy to commit peonage, returned a verdict of guilty late Friday night. Sentence will be imposed later.

Burn Bacon to Keep Warm.

Carlsbad, N. M., Nov. 24.—The fuel supply in this town is exhausted and people have been forced to burn bacon to keep from freezing. Schools have been dismissed in consequence of the cold. The snow is a foot deep in town and two feet on the range.

PEARY IS AT SYDNEY AFTER ARCTIC TRIP

SEARCHER FOR THE POLE REACHES PORT AND MEETS HIS WIFE.

Gives Vessel Credit for Expedition's "Farthest North" Record — Talk with Captain Bartlett, Who Also Warmly Praises the Roosevelt.

Sydney, C. B., Nov. 24.—Flying the flag of the United States, which had been placed nearer the north pole than any other national standard, and weather-beaten and disabled, the Peary arctic steamer Roosevelt arrived here Friday under sail and steam after 16 months' vain effort to reach the pole. Though not entirely successful, the expedition nevertheless got to 87 degrees 6 minutes north latitude.

The Roosevelt left Port-aux-Basque, Newfoundland, at three o'clock Thursday afternoon, and averaged five miles an hour to Sydney, experiencing light wind and rains. The ship came to an anchor off the yacht squadron pier.

Explorer Meets His Wife.

Though the hour was early, the Roosevelt was soon visited by the American consul and various local officials and an invitation was extended Commander Peary on behalf of the Sydney board of trade to be the guest of the commercial body at a banquet in his honor at night. A large quantity of mail awaited Commander Peary. He came ashore almost immediately after the steamer anchored and joined Mrs. Peary, who has been here for two weeks waiting for her husband's return.

After reading the letters accumulated during the past fortnight, Commander Peary decided to leave to-day by rail for New York.

There was a gap of 100 miles in the survey of Grantland by the English expedition on one hand and that of the Sverdrup discoveries on the other. Peary has closed this up. Probably the only section of unknown coast remaining in the arctic is the northeast coast of Greenland, embracing 150 miles.

Praises the Roosevelt.

Commander Peary is enthusiastic about the performance of the steamer Roosevelt. Asked if the very advanced point to which he had been able to place the Roosevelt in winter quarters was due to careful and increased knowledge of the movements of the ice he said it was due to the Roosevelt herself. He did not believe there was ever another ship afloat could have stood the battle with the ice the Roosevelt had successfully fought. The boilers were the one defective feature of the ship. More than half the power of the ship was represented by water tube boilers and these gave out shortly after the Roosevelt left Sydney in 1905.

Commander Peary said he ought to get back to New York before discussing the prospectus of a new expedition.

Thanks for Many Messages.

Commander Peary has received a large number of congratulatory messages and requests the press to circulate the following general acknowledgement:

"Commander Peary desires to make preliminary acknowledgement and express his deep appreciation of the numerous letters and telegrams of congratulation which have been sent him. As rapidly as possible he will make direct and individual acknowledgement."

The Roosevelt occupied anchorage opposite the yacht club pier usually reserved for vessels of war. The squadron flag and Canadian ensign are flying as a further mark of honor. The stars and stripes on the United States consulate were raised when the Roosevelt came into port. Among the early callers upon Commander Peary at the Sydney hotel was American Consul West. Learning of Peary's wishes to make his departure as soon as possible the idea of tendering him a public banquet was abandoned and a reception at the rooms of the yacht club substituted.

Bartlett Willing to Go Back.

Capt. John Bartlett, master of the Roosevelt, said the steamer was a good sea boat and that he will sail her to New York. He is ready to go again to the arctic.

Capt. Bartlett was in charge of one of the parties supporting Commander Peary's advance. He said the storm which did the mischief was tremendous in violence and accompanied by blinding squalls of fine arctic snow. The ice field was rent widely asunder and all trace of the track was destroyed. Under ordinary conditions tracking is easy in the far north, as the snow packs hard and boot marks are sometimes preserved for six months. Capt. Bartlett is satisfied the pole can be reached without great difficulty, weather permitting, and believes it would have been accomplished this trip except for the gale in question.

Convicted of Killing Sister.

Wray, Col., Nov. 24.—Gerret Van Wyk, a ranchman, and his wife were found guilty Friday of the murder of Gerret Haast, sister of Mrs. Van Wyk, and were sentenced to life imprisonment. Miss Haast was shot and killed in a cabin on the plains, where she lived alone. It was charged that her sister and brother-in-law killed her in order to get the insurance on her life.

Records of Wagers.

Betting is neither so general nor so promiscuous as it was 150 years ago, when books for recording wagers were always kept on the tables in the much frequented coffee houses of London. Some of these books are still to be found among collections of antiques, and they make interesting reading. All manner of bets are entered there, on marriages, births and deaths, on the duration of a ministry, on the length of the lives of prominent personages, on the possibility of earthquakes, and even on hangings.

Picquart Shows Generosity.

Gen. Picquart, the defender of Dreyfus and now the French minister of war, has defined his attitude toward his old prosecutors in the army. When an officer who was involved in the conspiracy that banished Picquart to the border of the Sahara, entered the minister's office and began to stammer out a statement on the subject Picquart stopped him, saying: "I only know one thing and that is that you have always been an excellent officer. You may be sure that I shall not forget that."

Johnson's Plurality.

Governor Johnson's plurality over A. L. Cole is approximately 72,300. Returns have been very slow in coming from the remote precincts in the northern parts of the state, and seven precincts in Beltrami county are still to be heard from. Every other county has counted its vote, and for the first time we are able to present a table giving the official returns, with the exception of the seven precincts.

The two leading candidates have polled between them 263,949 votes, or about 24,000 under the vote cast for Johnson and Dunn in 1904. Governor Johnson's total then was 147,992 and he has increased it by more than 20,000. Mr. Cole falls off about 44,000 from the vote cast for Dunn, which was 140,130.

The total by counties, official in every case but Beltrami, and with the pluralities of two years ago for comparison, is here shown:

Agricultural Meeting.

This winter's annual meeting of the Minnesota State Agricultural Society will be held in the assembly room of the Minneapolis city hall on January 8, 9, and 10. It has been the custom of the society in recent years to alternate the meetings between Minneapolis and St. Paul, but it has been found desirable, owing to the crowded condition of the hotels in St. Paul during the legislative session, to have the St. Paul meeting of the society come in the year when the legislature is not there. Consequently two meetings will be held in Minneapolis and in 1908 the society will go back to St. Paul.

Secretary E. W. Randall is working up the program for the meeting and is all ready to announce that two leading features of the session will be "tile drainage" and "dairy interests." The latter subject will be under the direction of E. K. Slater, state dairy and food commissioner, and will occupy the entire evening on Tuesday, the opening day of the session. Governor Johnson will make the opening address.

TOSSED ON A LONE ISLAND.

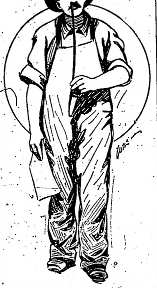
STRANGE TALE OF A MODERN ROBINSON CRUSOE.

Native of Transvaal Saved from Wrecked Ship and Lives on Uninhabited Spot with Kaffir Boy as Only Companion.

New York.—No stranger story ever came to this city than that brought here by the bark Hemingway which had sailed all around the globe from the day she left Brooklyn one sultry morning in the July of 1904, until she returned here a few weeks ago. The Hemingway had a polyglot crew aboard of her. There were Germans, Irishmen, a Swede and a Transvaaler. The last named was the center of interest as Capt. Warring told the yarn of the Hemingway and her long cruise. The bark had had a fine passage across the Atlantic and was making around the Cape of Good Hope when the Modern Robinson Crusoe came aboard.

Refusing to take the oath of allegiance to England after the conclusion of the Boer war, Adrian Van den Fossbeck had been shipped to Cape Town via Durban in an English transport along with other irreconciliables of the fallen republic. On the way down the coast of Africa the transport met with disaster. When the transport foundered many of the unfortunate patriots were drowned, the British officers and crew making no bones about it when the time came to leave the ship to keep the Transvaalers back until every English officer and sailor had been safely stowed in a lifeboat. Then there remained room for about 20 Boers, and these were bundled in as the lifeboats cast off from the doomed transport. There were about a hundred other Afrikanders aboard and these were left to their fate. Among them was Adrian Van den Fossbeck.

When it seemed that the hundred luckless Boers would surely go down with the sinking transport, another steamer came alongside. This was a Dutch trader. It took off the Boers from the sinking ship and then conveniently failed to notice the signals from the life boats occupied by the British officers and men. The latter were eventually picked up by another British steamer after they had suffered untold hardships in their open boats on the wild African coast. The Dutch vessel landed her cargo of patriots at Madagascar, where all the Boers remained with the exception of one or two who took to a seafaring life. Among them was Van den Fossbeck. He shipped on a small coasting schooner bound for the north with her destination an Arabian port. Before the Arabian port was reached the schooner foundered and all hands, with the exception of Van den Fossbeck and a small Kaffir boy, were lost. The Boer and Kaffir were tossed during the night on a small and uninhabited island out of sight of the mainland, where the remained for nearly three months, according to the best reckoning Van den Fossbeck could make. The Kaffir was, in a measure, a modern Friday for he became the "valet" for the rough Transvaal sailor, though the latter had no trousers to be pressed and creased and no fancy waistcoats to be kept in order. The two strange mates lived on the small game that they were able to catch on the island and raw fish. The fish they dried and made the best of the unpalatable mess. After three months of this life the Kaffir boy one morning rushed into the improvised tent that the Boer Robinson Crusoe had put up.



ADRIAN VAN DEN FOSSBECK.
(Modern Robinson Crusoe Who Recently Arrived at New York.)

"Mynheer! Eeen boot!" he cried.

Both Boer and Kaffir strained their eyes and made out the spars of a big bark. It was the Hemingway. The two modern castaways saw the bark hove to and finally a boat was lowered. It seemed hours before the small boat came within hailing distance. When it did it did not take long for Rip Fossbeck and the Kaffir to go aboard. They had no luggage to cart with them and their clothing was so torn as to make the two resemble wild men.

Newsboy to Attend College.

Boston Boy Is First to Receive Harvard Scholarship.

Boston.—Received with honors never before paid to a student entering the university, welcomed by the president, faculty and a committee of distinguished citizens, a Boston newsboy entered Harvard recently as a freshman under circumstances of peculiar interest.

The newsboy was Meyer Heller, of No. 23 Wall street, Boston, the winner of a scholarship established through the efforts of the Newsboys' Protective union, of Boston, who have raised a fund of $2,500 to send one of their number annually to Harvard. He is 17 years old, and starts what is hoped will be a long list of newsboys who will thus be encouraged to strive for higher education and make their way through the university. There are many other newsboys in training for the scholarship at the Boston high and Latin schools, and Meyer Heller had a close competitor, who was only one point behind him in the entrance examinations, and who received honorable mention from President Eliot.

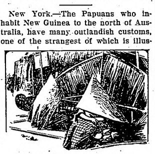
As Heller was called to Ford hall to receive the award, a committee of prominent Bostonians, including, besides President Eliot, Mayor Fitzgerald, Rev. Dr. E. A. Horton, James J. Storrow, chairman of the Boston school board; Judge Harvey N. Baker, of the juvenile court, and a number of representative women, gathered on the platform to greet him. He was escorted to the hall by 500 newsboys, while 300 more packed the balcony as the escort filed in.

Heller has been a newsboy for eight years, and still keeps his stand in Merrimac street while attending college. He holds a record for selling an average of 250 papers a day.

A QUEER MOURNING FASHION.

New York.—The Papuans who inhabit New Guinea to the north of Australia, have many outlandish customs, one of the strangest of which is illustrated herewith. It shows how the widows are compelled to mourn for their husbands by wearing an enormous head dress. This is their idea of widow's weeds, the head dress being made of the beaten bark of mulberry trees, a material commonly known as "tappa cloth."



Papuan Widows in Mourning.

The widow's head dress, which completely hides her mop of black frizzly hair, of which she is very proud, must be worn continuously during the entire period of mourning, and no Papuan woman recently bereaved would dare to be seen in public without it.

Learned English from Bible.

The real name of Joseph Conrad, the author, is not Conrad but is Polish and rich in consonants after the fashion of his native language. How this polish sailor learned to speak English will be of interest to those who admire his style in writing. He could not read the language until years ago a missionary at a Chinese port handed him an English Bible. With the Bible as a text book and some help in talking with English sailors he mastered the language. To the solemn and beautiful language of the Bible, it is said, he owes the vivid strength of his own style. Mr. Conrad assumed his pen name when he became an English author and his home is now in a quiet old cottage in England.

THE SUNBEAM.

BY W. G. HUNT.

Published every Friday, at Sunbeam, Red Lake County Minnesota.

Subscription price $1,00 per year in advance. If not paid in advance $1.50

Entered as Second-class matter August 30, 1905, at the post office at Sunbeam Minn. under the Act of Congress of March 3, 1879.

How much more contented and happier we would be, if we compared our situation with those whose condition is much worse than our own, instead of thinking only of those who are ahead and above us, It is a weakness of the human race to be always enveying those whose lot seems to be better than our own. Happiness consists more in being content with what we have than in the revelry of luxury.—Ex.

Ditch The Ditch.

The withdrawal of the land from market on this reservation will retard settlement somewhat, but what is left is rather to wet for agriculturel purposes. When the government starts drainage they should commence on the Red Lake River with dredge boats, and make it at least four feet deeper so it can take care of the water turned into it from the swamps. To start ditching into this river on a large scale without increasing its dept would flood more land than would be reclaimed, by the ditches. The trouble is there is to much water has to go down this river for the depth of it, so it spreads out and floods the whole country during the spring of the year.

Will Help Tramp Roads.

Today is the date set for the argument of the County Seat Removel Case to be argued before the supream court. The Thief River Falls News says.

"A decision will probaly be rendered in the matter in about thirty or sixty days from time arguments are made and should the decision be favorable to Thief River Falls, the election on the county seat removel will be held some time in Febsuary or March. Thief River Falls Attorneys feel confident that the decision of Judge Watts, which was favorable to Thief River Falls will be sustained, and if this is the case, the county seat of Red Lake county will be removed to Thief River Falls next summer."

We think along the latter part of February or the fore part of March would be a satisfactory time to the people up this way, as that is a time of the year when it is pretty hard to keep the roads traveled enough to keep them in good condition, and as both Thief River and Red Lake Falls will undoubtly send out a large number of men and teams to tell us how to vote it will be a great help to keep the roads in good condition.

Now if Red Lake Falls starts a team from Plummer, to go to Garnes, Grit, Lillo, Rhoda, Radney, Sunbeam, Highlanding, Erie Kuehnel, Brunkeberg, Kratka, Anton and back to Plummer, to call on the voters, and Thief River Falls starts a steam and man to Anton, Kratka, Brunkeberg, Kuehnel, Highlanding, and back to Sunbeam, Radney, Rhoda, Lillo, Grit, Garnes and Plummer. Now either or both sides shaould travel this route regular for about thirty days, once, or twice a day, if it takes a hundred men and teams to do it, and by the time election day comes the farmers will have a good hard traveled road to go to election on and know just how to vote.

SINGER BROS., Rhoda,

A Siberian Wonder.

The scientists have for years been perplexed over the wonderful frozen well at Yakutsk, Siberia. As long ago as 1828 it was announced that the ground was frozen to an abnormal depth at the place referred to. In the summer of 1829 a Russian merchant set a gang of men to the task of ascertaining the depth of the frozen stratum They gave up the job after digging some thirty feet in solidly frozen ground. The Russian Academy of Sciences took the matter in hand and between 1838 and 1844 dug to a depth of 382 feet and then abandoned the shaft because the earth was still frozen as hard as a rock. Natural cold could never penetrate to such a depth, and the phenomenon is still unexplained.

The Horse as a Jumper.

A horse can certainly jump higher than a man. There is at least one authentic case of a hunter clearing a seven foot paling, and a century or so ago a Mr. Bingham leaped his horse over the wall of Hyde park, which was six and one-half feet high on the inside and eight feet on the outside. The horse cleared this obstacle twice in rapid succession, and we are quite certain that no man who has ever lived could do it.—London Answers.

Coffee In Guatemala.

The laborers in the coffee plantations in Guatemala get only 8 to 20 cents (gold) a day. The capitalists get as profit 50 to 60 per cent of the market value. During harvesting time the coffee business gives employment to more than one-half of the population. A single coffee tree, under the most favorable conditions, has been known to yield twenty-five pounds of beans.

Work and Talk.

Generally speaking, it is true of women as of men that those who think most say least. Woman's talkativeness is the result of her sedentary occupation. Tailors, shoemakers and weavers —all men who sit close at their work—have, in common with women, not only hypochondriacal fancies, but also a tendency to great talkativeness.—Richter.

The Word Cigar.

The word cigar occurs in a German dictionary for the first time in 1813 and in the Dictionnaire of the French Academie in 1835. Kant used the word "ziggaro" in 1798. In Spain at the present day the word "cigarro" means a cigarette, for which the Spaniards have the word "pitillos." Their name for a cigar is "un puro."

Therein Is the Difference.

A meddler is a person who fails in his attempt. The meddler who succeeds is no meddler, but a hero.—Duluth Herald.

How to Tell if Worsted or Woolen Cloths Are Adulterated.

Worsted cloths are less often adulterated than woolens and are more easily detected. A cotton worsted is a lie on the face of it, for the cotton stands out with prominence. But often a cotton thread is twisted with a worsted thread, and to determine its presence it is only necessary to take the twist out of the thread and then examine its component parts.

Cotton, having a long staple, can be carded and combed with wool to be spun into worsted yarn. This is done to cheapen the cost of production. Cotton is carded and spun with wool and shoddy, not so much to cheapen the yarn, for cotton is generally as expensive as some shoddies, but is introduced to give strength or spinning qualities to the stock. In many cases the shoddy is of such short staple that it would not stand the drawing in spinning, and, as it would make the cost of the yarn too high to put in enough wool to give that lacking strength, cotton is put in for this purpose.

The percentage of cotton in a fabric can be determined in this manner: Take a small piece of cloth and weigh it. Now boil it for five minutes in a 5 per cent solution of caustic soda. Take out what is left, and, if any, it is all cotton. The wool will all be dissolved. The percentage of shoddy cannot be determined except by experience.

A cloth or yarn with shoddy in it is easily detected by its feel. Cloth made of all new wool is softer feeling than one containing shoddy, for the latter has lost that new, soft, springy feel peculiar to wool.—American Wool and Cotton Reporter.

Success Prolongs Life.

It is now well known that increased complexity of life with increased expenditure distinctly aids longevity. Luxury, "the fertile parent of a whole family of diseases," modifies it greatly, of course, but this is a manageable factor, says the London Chronicle. We have only to recall personal experience to realize the force of intellectual stimulation. The interest of sport will sustain men without fatigue for distances they otherwise could not traverse. The excitement of strife will often mask the presence of wounds. Self forgetfulness in all the walks of life, under the stress of love, chivalry or accepted duty, doubles human endurance. Success gives new vitality, new powers and this is another name for new life.

No Notion of Real Trouble.

"I bet I get into more trouble than any man in this state," volunteered the young fellow who had come in the club house. "Nothing in the trouble line overlooks me. Why, I'd be afraid to marry"—

"What! Ain't you married?" ejaculated the red nosed elderly party who was hovering over the gratis lunch "Boy, you don't know what trouble is." -Louisville Courier Journal.

Nobody Was There.

To take the census of the British empire is a matter of difficulty in certain districts. A native official was ordered to take a census of what was known to be a populous village in Uganda. He returned with the report that there was no population, the explanation being that the inhabitants had fled on hearing of his approach. More precise instructions were given to him, and he paid another visit to the village. The result of his inquiry was given thus in the tabulated form: Number of huts, 257; inhabitants, men over eighteen years of age, 0; men under eighteen years of age, 0; women, 0; children, 0; total, 0.

The Naming of a Motor-Car

By Edgar Turner and Reginald Hodder.

(Copyright, 1906, by Joseph B. Bowles.)

"What to call her? that's the question," said Branson, the director, of the Zoological gardens, as he walked round his new 16 horsepower motor-car at the gate, admiring her build and indicating her strong points here and there.

"Call her Rattlesnake, or Eagle, or Bison," I suggested. "Regard her as another strange creature added to your collection."

"None of those names exactly describes 16 horsepower," he objected. "Indeed, I walked through the gardens this morning, from the ostriches to the tortoises, without finding just the thing wanted."

Dr. Branson's house, where I was spending a short holiday, was on the outskirts of the gardens, facing the encircling road, and from behind the heavy banks of foliage at the back we could hear the growling chorus of the denizens of the zoo. A lion roared majestically; jackals bayed at the full moon rising above the tree-tops; and the hyaenas laughed again. With the sound of the primeval forest in our ears, the motor throbbing with pent energy seemed strangely unreal.

"No, I'm hanged if I know what to call her," said Branson after a brief, reflective silence. "Here, let's take a spin round the circle at high speed. There's no one about, and 50 miles an hour might inspire us with a name."

"Sorry. Afraid I can't come," I replied. "I want to catch the late mail, and have only a quarter of an hour to do it in."

"All right," he said, getting in, "see you later." And the car started round the circle in search of a name.

I ran up to the house and in a few minutes finished my letter. Then, wheeling out my bicycle, I mounted and set off for the post office. As I passed along the outer wall of the gardens, I heard a commotion among the ducks, accompanied by loud shouts. What was the matter? Possibly, I thought, some keepers chasing a predatory dog that had no right in the zoo. And, as the shouting soon ceased, I assumed that they had successfully scared the marauder away from the duck ponds.

As I drew near a large acacia shadowing the path outside the wall, I concluded that my guess was correct, for I saw a huge dog leap over on to the roadside and stand in the shadow watching my approach. He appeared to be one of those massive Great Dane brutes, but I could not see him very distinctly.

When I drew level with the acacia, I flicked my fingers and said gaily: "Hello, boy! After the ducks, eh?"

For a moment I thought he liked my pleasant greeting. But only for a moment. Then my heart stood still and my hair rose on my head; for a mighty roar came from the animal's throat, and with a tremendous bound he launched himself in the air at me.

Involuntarily I made a sudden spurt to escape the spring, and glancing over my shoulder, saw the huge beast descending. I groaned as I heard the heavy fall of his feet a little way behind my back wheel. That momentary glance showed me that it was a savage lion, and not a dog, that was at my heels.

While he pulled himself together after his spring, I put on speed and gained a few yards. But he followed swiftly. And presently there was another roar, and I knew he was in the air a second time. Thinking that in a second his sharp claws would be in my shoulders, I nearly rolled off the bicycle with terror. Again, however, he fell short, and again I sprinted for dear life.

He followed at a gallop and then sprang once more. The moments while he was in the air seemed hours, and when his four paws thudded on the road again, I felt to my horror that he had alighted a little nearer to me than before. I bent over the handlebars and strove to increase my speed, but my legs were weak and trembling, and I could not. I heard his angry growls and quick breath as he galloped again, and I expected presently to hear his roar before his next spring. And at that roar I felt I should collapse. It is an awful sound when it is hard on your heels.

Again he sprang—this time with a short snarl. Cold thrills shot down my back as I spurted forward. The snap of his jaws sounded not two yards off my back wheel, and a growl of baffled rage spoke of his disappointment.

But I was now beginning to collect my wits, and my legs were getting firm again. I resolved that at the next spring I would swerve from the center of the road to the right-hand side and so possibly evade him. It came. I felt him rushing through the air behind me, and swerved sharply. No sooner had I done so than he alighted almost abreast of me on the track I had just left. His bark and snarl were terrible to hear.

Keeping on the extreme right-hand side of the road, I increased my pace, the lion following at a gallop less than half-a-dozen yards behind. Suddenly I saw the lights of a motor-car rounding the curve ahead of me. This, I thought, would frighten him; but no; he was mad and determined to have me. The car was approaching very rapidly. Like lightning, I made up my mind to cut across its path, hoping in this way to scare or baffle my pursuer.

Just as I swerved to do this, there came another roar from behind. Apparently the lion had guessed my plan, and this time I felt that his spring was right on my track. I found, too, that I had misjudged the pace of the car, which was now tearing down on us at racing speed. I swerved further and headed direct for the opposite side of the road to avoid being run down. The thing occupied not three seconds. The roar and the spring of the lion, the "toot-toot" of the motor a dozen yards away, and my swerving to escape, were almost simultaneous.

I felt the wind of the rushing car as it grazed my hind wheel. There was a shout, a crushing thud, and a jolt on the part of the car; while I, unable to stop my career, dashed full tilt into the thick hedge at the roadside.

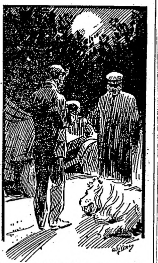
The yielding foliage of the micro carpa, of which the hedge was composed, saved me from broken bones; but it was some time before I could pull myself together. When at last I did so and crawled out, I saw Branson and two of the zoological garden keepers, both breathless as if they had been running, gathered round an object in the middle of the road. It was the lion, dead.

"How did it happen?" I asked, feeling very much saved.

"Why," said Branson, "all I know is that at the moment you cut across my track, I saw the brute, with his eyes gleaming in the light, descending from his spring. He touched ground within a few inches of your wheel, and at that very moment we caught him fair on the head. It nearly upset us. Heavens! old man, it was a narrow escape all round."

"It was the narrowest escape I ever had," I exclaimed; and I narrated the pursuit briefly.

"The pity of it is," he said, dejectedly, "it's the finest lion in the gardens, and I've killed him with my motor car. His skull is completely smashed."



"Yes, I've Killed Him with My Motor Car."

He was indeed a magnificent beast. As he lay there dead on the road in the moonlight, I could not help admiring him, though he had almost been the death of me.

"Yes, I've killed him with my motor car," repeated Branson. "But," he added, turning to the keepers, "if it hadn't been for your carelessness, he would have been alive in his cage now. How the deuce did he get loose?"

One of the keepers started to explain in a lame fashion.

"Yes, yes," broke in Branson, cutting him short. "You shall give me the rest of the details later. Now see about taking the animal away. And remember that this is purely a departmental matter. No chattering to newspaper people or anything of that sort. And be careful over the skin—it must go to this gentleman who nearly lost his life through your carelessness."

"Well, there's one thing," remarked Branson presently. "We've lost a first-class lion, but we've found a good name for the car."

"What is it?" I asked.

"The Unicorn," he replied, with a smile. "The famous fight between the lion and the unicorn for the crown was, I believe, won by the lion. But on this occasion the other animal has come out on top. Yes, the name of the car is the Unicorn."

And a little later, when Branson opened a bottle of rare old wine in celebration of my escape, we formally toasted it under that name.

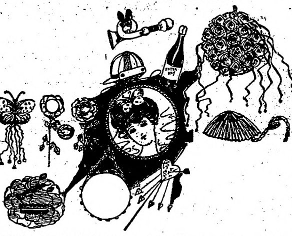
Predicts World of Lunatics.

London.—The world is going mad, asserts Dr. Forbes Winslow.

"According to the statistical figures on insanity," says the doctor, "it can be shown that before long there will be actually more lunatics in the world than sane people. The burning problem of the day is how to prevent this increase of insanity.

"What is the use of wasting time and energy on an education bill when we have before us this absorbing problem, the contemplation of an insane world to deal with?"

PRETTY COTILLON FAVORS.



There are more novelties in the line of cotillon favors than ever before, and any hostess who may be planning for a dance of this kind will find that it will not be difficult this year to secure enough novel little devices for her guests to "favor" each other for two or three cotillons if they should want to.

Flowers or flower suggestions prevail, for these naturally add to the picturesque effect of the dance as nothing else can. In the favors they are of all sorts of bright colors, powdered artistically with gilt, so that they glitter in a fascinating way during the varied figures at the dance.

There are wands of all kinds topped with large flowers or butterflies. Large crepe paper roses in pink or red, fleur-de-lis, pansies, chrysanthemums are all seen, the wand covered with paper in the same or some harmonious shade. On the end of one wand, which would be appropriate for an "announcement" party, is a large heart with a dozen or so of small red paper hearts hanging from this larger one. There is also a carnation wand with five very realistic flowers of this kind, the wand decorated with bells suspended on satin ribbon, the Jack Frost fairy wand made of crinkled white paper and large bow of green ribbon.

Other crape paper novelties such as large picture hats, muffs, boas, are anything but unbecoming to the dance belle. Parasols are made also in paper, for all the world likes their fluffy counterparts in laces and chiffon. This is but a sample of the lists which make the outlook for the cotillon season a favorable one.

Would You Like a Winter Window Box?

Such an Ornament Is Constant Source of Delight During the Cold Months Coming.

A wooden box fitted to the window with hooks and staples for fastening, and painted a dull, inconspicuous green, may be had for a small sum. Against this set tile boxes in silver or silver-gilt mountains, or boxes with stained glass panels outside, both of which cost many a pretty penny. Less expensive than these there are boxes and boxes.

The one thing needful in the window box is that it shall be stanch, and so set that it does not threaten the heads or the lives of unwary passers-by.

Before filling it with earth an authority in gardening warns amateurs to see that there are holes in the bottom sufficient to insure drainage, and over the whole bottom spread a layer of broken crocks or pebbles fully an inch deep. Put the earth on this to within an inch of the box top. Even a small box should not be less than ten inches high. A foot is better; thus the plants have sufficient soil.

Plant the edgings first. Set whatever is chosen so the stems shall stand over the box edge slightly slanted outward. Pack the earth well about the edge plants, and see that their roots are spread, not crowded in a lump.

Make holes close along the inner edge for the row of flowering plants. In growth they will reach for air and light, both roots and branches, so the insetting will help them to room. If vines are wanted for trailing over the inner edge bring back long well-grown sprays from the outside in preference to setting creeping things inside as well as out.

Art Reclaims Dark Room.

What an artistic touch can do with commonplace gas logs and a pair of brass andirons is portrayed forcibly in the old-fashioned home of young Mrs. Cabot Lodge in Washington. One of the drawing rooms is a dark, dreary apartment, which at first glance seemed hopeless. But a big fire place was lined with deep red tiles, and big gas logs were piled on bright, massive brass dogs. A mirror was placed opposite the fire place, and another where it received the reflection, and then a series of mirrors going into the halls and the whole suite on what the French would call the entresol. The effect is brilliant and enlivening, and, with the aid of rich hangings and a few rugs, the entire house is transformed. Mrs. Lodge has been kept busy by her friends, who have similar dark places, suggesting and arranging, and the pretty fashion bids fair to be the vogue.—Exchange.

Timely Entertainment Is Snow Luncheon.

Trouble and Expense Called For, But Results Will Delight Hostess and Guests.

The centerpiece may be a snowbank of white sweet peas, interspersed with some soft feathery bloom like spiraea to impart a suggestion of windblown snow. A set of eggshell china, without any colored decorations, and knives and forks with white porcelain handles should be secured. The candlesticks should be of glass, with white candles, shaded with white silk, decorated with crystal beads. The hors d'oeuvre dishes may include frosted almonds, peeled radishes, pickled onions and cakes with white icing. The place cards may have little frosted snow scenes, and a bunch of sweet peas, tied with white ribbon, may be laid at each cover. A menu made up almost entirely of white or nearly white edibles can be easily arranged.

The first course or appetizer might consist of iced peaches, the fruit being sliced, sprinkled with sugar, chilled and served in glasses or ice shells, with a covering of whipped cream. The caterer can mold snowballs of white ice cream, and snowball cakes can be made by dipping round cakes in soft boiled icing and then rolling them in shredded cocoanut. At one such luncheon the finger bowls were blocks of ice with flowers frozen in them, and a little hollow filled with water at the top.

Pretty Affair Is a Doll Carnival.

All to Be the Work of the Children, Superintended, of Course, by Older People.

Quite the prettiest affair of the season is to be a "doll carnival" given for the benefit of a children's charity. It is being given by children, of course superintended by older people, but the girls and boys, too, regard it as their special entertainment. There is to be a sale of dolls, doll house furniture, clothes and a complete doll house is to go to the child whose turnout receives the most votes in the parade which is to be a feature of the evening. Only children under ten years of age will participate in this and each doll is to be in a doll buggy trimmed with flowers or in any manner that suits the owner.

The judges are youthful, also; 14 is the age. The interest in the affair is widespread; fathers are arranging to be present, school teachers have caught the fever; in fact, the "doll festival" is in the air and someone remarked that the way to success lay in interesting the children. One especially interesting booth is to be entirely in charge of boys. They will display all sorts of home-made toys, orders will be taken for doll house furniture from samples, pictures framed, etc. And there is to be a clown doll in a wheelbarrow in the parade. Popcorn, salted peanuts, home-made candy and "light" refreshments will be on sale. Canned fruits, jelly and other delicacies for sick children will be received, also contributions of pictures and cards suitable for making into scrapbooks.

RHEUMATISM STAYS CURED

Mrs. Cota, Confined to Bed and in Constant Pain, Cured by Dr. Williams' Pink Pills.

Rheumatism can be inherited and that fact proves it to be a disease of the blood. It is necessary, therefore, to treat it through the blood if a permanent cure is expected. External applications may give temporary relief from pain but as long as the poisonous acid is in the blood the pain will return, perhaps in a new place, but it will surely return. Dr. Williams' Pink Pills cure rheumatism because they go directly to the seat of the disorder, purifying and enriching the blood.

Mrs. Henry Cota, of West Cheshire, Conn., is the wife of the village machinist. "Several years ago," she says, "I was laid up with rheumatism in my feet, ankles and knees. I was in constant pain and sometimes the affected parts would swell so badly that I could not get about at all to attend to my household duties. There was one period of three weeks during which I was confined to the bed. My sufferings were awful and the doctor's medicine did not help me.

"One day a neighbor told me about Dr. Williams' Pink Pills and I decided to try them. After I had taken them a short time I was decidedly better and a few more boxes cured me. What is better, the cure was permanent."

Remember Dr. Williams' Pink Pills do not act on the bowels. They make new blood and restore shattered nerves. They tone up the stomach and restore impaired digestion, bring healthful, refreshing sleep, give strength to the weak and make miserable, complaining people strong, hungry and energetic. They are sold by all druggists, or will be sent postpaid, on receipt of price, 50 cents per box, six boxes $2.50, by the Dr. Williams Medicine Co., Schenectady, N.Y.

NOVEMBER AILMENTS

THEIR PREVENTION AND CURE.

The Human System Must Adjust itself to Changing Temperatures.

November is the month of falling temperatures. Over all the temperate regions the hot weather has passed and the first rigors of winter have appeared. As the great bulk of civilized nations is located in the Temperate Zones, the effect of changing seasons is a question of the highest importance. When the weather begins to change from warm to cold, when cool nights succeed hot nights, when clear, cold days follow hot, sultry days, the human body must adjust itself to this changed condition or perish.

The perspiration incident to warm weather has been checked. This detains within the system poisonous materials which have heretofore found escape through the perspiration.

Most of the poisonous materials retained in the system by the checked perspiration find their way out of the body, if at all, through the kidneys. This throws upon the kidneys extra labor. They become charged and overloaded with the poisonous excretory materials. This has a tendency to inflame the kidneys, producing functional diseases of the kidneys and sometimes Bright's Disease.

Peruna acts upon the skin by stimulating the emunctory glands and ducts, thus preventing the detention of poisonous materials which should pass out. Peruna invigorates the kidneys and encourages them to fulfill their function in spite of the chills and discouragements of cold weather.

Pe-ru-na is a World-Renowned Remedy For Climatic Diseases.

Peruna is a combination of well-tried harmless remedies that have stood the test of time. Many of these remedies have been used by doctors and by the people in Europe and America for a hundred years.

Peruna has been used by Dr. Hartman in his private practice for many years with notable results. Its efficacy has been proven by decades of use by thousands of people, and has been substantiated over and over by many thousands of homes.

HUMMING BIRD CHASED BEE.

Movements of Couple Resembled Flashes of Lightning.

Here is a story as told by a gentleman who spends the greater portion of his time studying the habits of birds:

A humming bird with an angry dash expressed its disapproval of the presence of a big bumblebee in the same tree. The usually pugnacious bee incontinently fled, but he did not leave the tree. He darted back and forth among the branches and white blossoms, the humming bird in close pursuit. Where will you find another pair that could dodge and dart equal to these? They were like flashes of light, yet the pursuer followed the track of the pursued, turning when the bee turned.

In short, the bird and the bee controlled the movements of their bodies more quickly and more accurately than he could control the movements of his eyes. The chase was all over in half the time it takes to tell it, but the excitement of a pack of hounds after a fox was no greater. The bee escaped, the bird giving up the chase and alighting on a twig. It couldn't have been chasing the bee for food, and there is no possible explanation of its unprovoked attack, except that it wanted all the honey itself.

Reception Was Costly.

Mrs. Augustus Heaton, of Washington, some time ago changed from the Episcopalean to the Roman Catholic church and by way of celebrataing the event decided to give a reception in honor of the bishop of her diocese. She decided, however, that her already famous drawing-room was not sufficiently resplendent to serve as a place of reception for the bishop who was to come and congratulate her. There was yet time in which to make the room more attractive and Mme. Heaton, with true artistic taste, had everything taken out of the room except the old furniture and a few art objects. The walls before had been covered with tapestry, but that was not enough for a reception for the bishop. After much thought she finally decided on drab silk wall covering. What with this and other extensive changes in the room without the purchase of furniture Mrs. Heaton got rid of $9,000.

North Carolina a Woodworking State.

"North Carolina," said C. J. Field, of High Point, "is rapidly becoming the greatest woodworking state in the country. We are now second only to Michigan in this particular industry and at the present rate of increase will soon pass that state. In the city of High Point we have 60 furniture factories and make everything from a hall rack to the finest bedroom suits.

"Nine hundred solid carloads of furniture are shipped out of High Point every month. Our trade is not confined to the United States, for we ship furniture daily to China, Japan, Australia, Cuba, England, France, Germany, and in fact to nearly every civilized country in the world."—Washington Post.

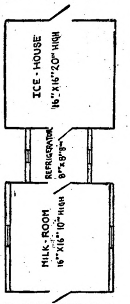
Artists Dislike Solitude.

Mme. Bernhardt and Signora Duse have mutual horror of being alone while traveling. Caruso, the tenor, is of the same temperament, always avoiding solitude. He is always accompanied by some friend, who arranges traveling and other details for him, gives the singer advice and takes all similar responsibility from the artist's shoulders.

COOL ROOM FOR MILK HOUSE.

The Ice Supply Is Kept in Adjoining Apartment.

A correspondent of the Montreal Herald asks the following questions: 1. I am supplying eight cans of milk per day for the city milk trade, and have thought of bottling it on the farm before shipping. Would cement walls be best for a small farm dairy or milk house? What size should it be?



Ground Plan of Milk House.

2. Would it taint the milk to keep a gasoline engine in the dairy?

3. How much ice should be stored?

4. How far should milk house be from stable to be safe from tainting?

To which questions the following answers are made:

1. If built of cement, would advise using cement blocks. The inside of the refrigerator and ice-house would need an eight-inch space filled with mill shavings and lined on the inside with one or two thicknesses of lumber and damp-proof paper. The cold air circulates from the ice-house to the refrigerator on the Hanrahan system. The ice-house should not be opened during warm weather. An extra supply of ice for cooling milk should be in a separate building. An ordinary ventilator on the top of the milk room is all that is necessary. The room may be further cooled by using a sub-earth duct, built of eight-inch tile placed eight to ten feet in the ground and at least 100 feet in length. The ceiling above the refrigerator and ice-house should have about one foot of dry sawdust or mill shavings on top to give protection from heat. Means for ventilating space between ceiling and roof should be provided by leaving the cornice boards off at the sides, so that the air may circulate through these spaces and up to the ventilator on the roof.

2. A gasoline engine would be very apt to taint the milk if kept in the dairy. Would prefer having it in a separate building.

3. The quantity of ice required to cool eight cans of milk daily would depend on the amount, temperature of water available, temperature to which milk was cooled, etc. On the average we should estimate 50 tons of ice as necessary. In the plan, we have allowed for three times this amount, so as to have ample room for cooling milk, etc., for household purposes, besides some to give away to the neighbors. If the ice is to be used daily for cooling milk, then an ice-house 10x12x20 would be large enough. The milk room may also be smaller, or left out altogether if Subscriber has another room for washing, bottling, etc. The ice-house and refrigerator would answer the purpose on most farms. The milk-room could be added afterwards if found necessary. This is true if cold water be available for cooling the milk, which may then be set in the refrigerator until ready for shipment.

4. How far the milk-house should be from the stable would depend greatly upon circumstances—how clean stable and yards are kept, etc. We should say that on the average they should be at least 60 feet apart. The closer they are together the less the labor involved in caring for the milk, but the greater the danger of its being tainted from the stable.

DAIRY NOTES.

Saltless butter is now rapidly coming into favor.

One year's record is not sufficient by which to judge a cow.

Milk from a sick cow is only good for one thing—to throw away.

If butter contains much water it will absorb many odors.

There are 5,000,000 globules of butter fat in one drop of milk.

The last drop of milk is the best, so don't leave any in the udder.

Cold and exposure will give cows catarrh and nearly all other diseases.

If milk is kept at a temperature of 40 degrees, bacteria will not multiply in it. They will increase at 45 degrees, and at 65 degrees milk will swarm with them.

"THE MARRYING SQUIRE."

Justice Geo. E. Law, of Brazil, Ind., Has Married 1,400 Couples.

Justice Geo. E. Law, of Brazil, Ind., has fairly earned the title of "The Marrying Squire," by which he is known far and wide, having already married some 1,400 couples. Ten years ago he was deputy county treasurer. "At that time," said Justice Law, "I was suffering from an annoying kidney trouble. My back ached, my rest was broken at night, and the passages of the kidney secretions were too frequent and contained sediment. Three boxes of Doan's Kidney Pills cured me in 1897, and for the past nine years I have been free from kidney complaint and backache."

Sweet Thoughts.

An Atchison father is very much disgusted. He recently bought his daughter a $75 gold watch, and she isn't as pleased with it as she was with a box of chocolates a young man sent her. The watch from her fathehr means nothing, but the chocolates seem to mean enough to cause her to sit and look out into the dark and think, and think, hours at a time.—Atchison Globe.

Cactus as a Timepiece.

Mexico has a cactus which grows toothpicks, another, ribbed and thickly set with teethlike spines, which furnishes the natives with combs; there is another cactus, the long, curved spines of which resemble fish-hooks; there is another which is an almost perfect imitation of the sea urchin; still another resembling a porcupine; there is another covered with long, red hair, which is nicknamed the red-headed cactus.

There are several varieties which serve as timepieces. One of these, the Cereus nycticalus, opens its blossoms at seven o'clock in the evening and closes them at seven o'clock in the morning; another opens at eight o'clock and closes at eight o'clock the next morning; another opens at nine o'clock in the morning and closes at noon.

American Expert Leads World.

Gardner F. Williams, the American mining engineer who directs the diamond output of the world, was born in Michigan, but became a resident of California at 15 and a student at California college in Oakland, afterward the state university. He perfected his education at the mining Academy of Freiberg, among the lead mines of Saxony. He was assayer in the mint at San Francisco two years and spent some time in practical work in the mines of Nevada and northern California. He then went on an exploring expedition for the Rothschilds to Maschonaland and made the acquaintance of Cecil Rhodes. He took charge of the mines of the De Beers company in 1886, through the influence of Rhodes and has been at their head until recently, when he returned to America, leaving his son, Alpheus Williams in his place.

A DOCTOR'S TRIALS.

He Sometimes Gets Sick Like Other People.

Even doing good to people is hard work if you have too much of it to do.

No one knows this better than the hard-working, conscientious family doctor. He has troubles of his own—often gets caught in the rain or snow, or loses so much sleep he sometimes gets out of sorts. An overworked Ohio doctor tells his experience:

"About three years ago as the result of doing two men's work, attending a large practice and looking after the details of another business, my health broke down completely, and I was little better than a physical wreck.

"I suffered from indigestion and constipation, loss of weight and appetite, bloating and pain after meals, loss of memory and lack of nerve force for continued mental application.

"I became irritable, easily angered and despondent without cause. The heart's action became irregular and weak, with frequent attacks of palpitation during the first hour of two after retiring.

"Some Grape-Nuts and cut bananas came for my lunch one day and pleased me particularly with the result. I got more satisfaction from it than from anything I had eaten for months, and on further investigation and use, adopted Grape-Nuts for my morning and evening meals, served usually with cream and a sprinkle of salt or sugar.

"My improvement was rapid and permanent in weight as well as in physical and mental endurance. In a word, I am filled with the joy of living again, and continue the daily use of Grape-Nuts for breakfast and often for the evening meal.

"The little pamphlet, 'The Road to Wellville,' found in pkgs., is invariably saved and handed to some needy patient along with the indicated remedy." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich. "There's a reason."

WORST CASE OF ECZEMA.

Spread Rapidly Over Body—Limbs and Arms Had to Be Bandaged—Marvelous Cure by Cuticura.

"My son, who is now twenty-two years of age, when he was four months old began to have eczema on his face, spreading quite rapidly until he was nearly covered. We had all the doctors around us, and some from larger places, but no one helped him a particle. The eczema was something terrible, and the doctors said it was the worst case they ever saw. At times his whole body and face were covered, all but his feet. I had to bandage his limbs and arms; his scalp was just dreadful. A friend teased me to try Cuticura, and I began to use all three of the Cuticura Remedies. He was better in two months; and in six months he was well. Mrs. R. L. Risley, Piermont, N. H., Oct. 24, 1905."

Disobedience Brought Death.

An Italian prince had strictly forbidden one of his daughters to smoke, but so great a hold had the habit obtained over her that she secretly engaged in the practice at every opportunity. One day she was indulging in a cigarette as she reclined on a balcony attired in a dress of the lightest muslin. Suddenly her father appeared on the scene. In the hurry to hide the evidence of her disobedience the princess placed her hand with the burning cigarette behind her back. The result was startling and tragic—her frock was immediately in a blaze, and she was fearfully burned from head to foot, dying after suffering intensely.

The Original Porous Plaster.

It's Allcock's, first introduced to the people sixty years ago, and to-day undoubtedly has the largest sale of any external remedy—millions being sold annually all over the world. There have been imitations, to be sure, but never has there been one to even compare with Allcock's—the world's standard external remedy.

For a weak back, cold on the chest or any local pain, the result of taking cold or over-strain, nothing we know of compares with this famous plaster.

Reynard's Hiding Place.

During a run of the Essex Union Hounds at Great Burstead, England, the fox took refuge in a brewhouse, and seated itself on the copper of boiling water. Finding his position too warm, and being hard pressed by the hounds, it fled to the roof and sought safety among the rafters.

Chairs were upset, plates and dishes broken and paint pots overturned by the hounds, until the arrival of one of the whips, who caught the fox and liberated it.

THE WINNING STROKE

If more than ordinary skill in playing brings the honors of the game to the winning player, so exceptional merit in a remedy ensures the commendation of the well informed, and as a reasonable amount of outdoor life and recreation is conducive to the health and strength, so does a perfect laxative tend to one's improvement in cases of constipation, biliousness, headaches, etc. It is all important, however, in selecting a laxative, to choose one of known quality and excellence, like the ever pleasant Syrup of Figs, manufactured by the California Fig Syrup Co., a laxative which sweetens and cleanses the system effectually, when a laxative is needed, without any unpleasant after effects, as it acts naturally and gently on the internal organs, simply assisting nature when nature needs assistance, without griping, irritating or debilitating the internal organs in any way, as it contains nothing of an objectionable or injurious nature. As the plants which are combined with the figs in the manufacture of Syrup of Figs are known to physicians to act most beneficially upon the system, the remedy has met with their general approval as a family laxative, a fact well worth considering in making purchases.

It is because of the fact that SYRUP OF FIGS is a remedy of known quality and excellence, and approved by physicians that has led to its use by so many millions of well informed people, who would not use any remedy of uncertain quality or inferior reputation. Every family should have a bottle of the genuine on hand at all times, to use when a laxative remedy is required. Please to remember that the genuine Syrup of Figs is for sale in bottles of one size only, by all reputable druggists, and that full name of the company—California Fig Syrup Co., is plainly printed on the front of every package. Regular price, 50c per bottle.

THE INVENTIONS OF HAWKINS

By EDGAR FRANKLIN

THE ANTI-FIRE-FLY.

Perhaps some of the blame should rest upon the barbaric habit of having Sunday dinner in the middle of the afternoon.

Had it been evening when Hawkins and his better half sat down to dinner with us, it would not, naturally, have been daylight; and much unpleasantness might have been avoided, for the gas had not been turned on in the remodeled Hawkins residence, and an inspection would have been impossible.

Again, I may have started the trouble myself by bringing up the subject of the renovations.

"Yes, the work's all done," said Hawkins, with a more genial air than he usually exhibited when that topic was touched. "I tell you, it's a model home now."

"Particularly in containing no new inventions by its owner," added Mrs. Hawkins.

"Oh, those may come later," said the gifted inventor, casting a complacent wink in my direction.

"Not if I have anything to say about it," replied the lady, rather tartly. "We escaped with our lives when the house was wrecked, but next time—"

"Madam," flared Hawkins, "if you knew what that house—"

Just here my wife broke in with a spasmodic remark anent the doings of the Russians in Manchuria, and a discussion of the merits of Hawkins' inventions was happily averted.

But the spunky light didn't die out of Hawkins' eye. He appeared to be nursing something beside wrath, and when we arose from the table he remarked shortly:

"Come up to the house, Griggs, and smoke a cigar while we look it over."

"And note the charm of the inventionless home," supplemented his wife.

"Inventionless fiddlestick!" snapped Hawkins, as he slammed the door behind us. "It's a wonder to me that women weren't created either with sense or without tongue."

I made no comment and we walked in silence to the Hawkins house.

It had been done over in a style which must have made Hawkins' bank account look like an Arabian grain field after a particularly bad locust year; but beyond noting the general beauty of the decorations, I found nothing remarkable until we reached the second floor.

There, as we gazed from the back windows, it struck me that something familiar had departed, and I asked:

"What's become of the fire-escape?"

"Don't you see, eh?" said the inventor, with a prodigiously mysterious smile.

"Hardly. Have you made it invisible?"

"No and yes," chuckled Hawkins. "What would you say, Griggs, to a fire-escape that you kept indoors until it was needed?"

"I should say 'nay, nay,' if anyone wanted me to use it."

"No," I mean—oh, come upstairs and I'll show you at once."

"Show me what, Hawkins?" I cried, detaining him with a firm hand. "Is it another contrivance? Has it a motor? Does it use gasolene or gunpowder or dynamite?"

"No, it does not!" said the inventor, gruffly, trudging toward the top of the house.

"There!" he exclaimed when we had reached the upper floor. "That's it. What do you think of it?"

It was a device of strange appearance. It seemed to be a huge clothes-basket, such as is used for transportation of the family "wash," and it was piled with what appeared to be the remains of as many white sun-umbrellas as could have been collected at half a dozen seaside resorts.

"What is it?" I said, with a blank smile. "Junk?"

"No, it's not junk. That mass of ribs and white silk which loks like junk to your unaccustomed eye constitutes a set of aeroplanes or wings."

"But the other thing is merely the common or domestic variety of wash-basket, is it not?"

"Well—er—yes," admitted Hawkins, with cold dignity. "That happened to be the most suitable thing for my purpose in this experimental model. Now, you see, when the wings are spread the basket is suspended beneath just as the car of a balloon is suspended from a gas-bag, and—"

"Aha! I see it all now!" I cried. "You fill the basket, point it in the right direction, and it flaps its wings and flies away to the washlady!"

"That, Griggs," sneered Hawkins, "is about the view a poor little brain like yours, permeated with cheap humor, would take. Really, I don't suppose you could guess the purpose or the name of that thing if you tried a week."

"Candidly, I don't think I could. What is it?"

"It's the Hawkins' Anti-Fire-Fly!" said the inventor.

"The Hawkins—what?" I ejaculated.

"The Anti-Fire-Fly!" repated Hawkins, enthusiastically. "Say, Griggs, how that will sound in an advertisement: 'Fly Away from Fire with the Anti-Fire-Fly!' Great, isn't it?"

"So it's a fire escape?"

"Certainly," chuckled Hawkins, digging around among the ribs and bringing into tangible shape what looked like several sets of huge bird-wings. "No more climbing down red-hot ladders through belching flames! No more children being thrown from fifth-story windows! No, siree! All we have to do now is to place the Anti-Fire-Fly on the window-sill, spread the wings, jump into the basket, push her off, and—"

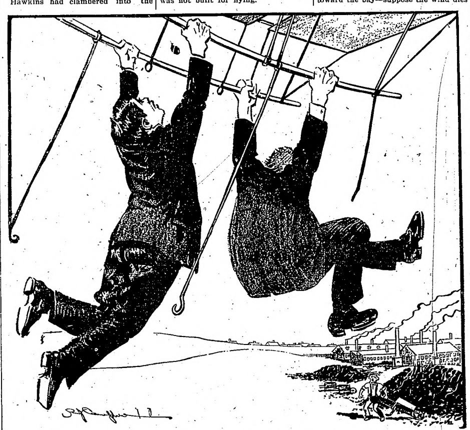
"And drop to instant death!"

"And float gently away from the fire and down to the earth!" concluded Hawkins, opening the window and shoving out the basket until it fairly hung over the back yard. "Just watch me."

"See here!" I cried. "You're not going to get into that thing?"

"I'm not, eh? You watch me!"

Hawkins had clambered into the basket before I could lay a hand on him.



"Hey, Youse," Shouted the Man with the Wheelbarrow.

"Now!" he cried, giving a push with his foot.

My breathing apparatus seemed to go on strike. Hawkins, basket, wings and all dropped from the window.

For an instant they went straight toward the earth; then, like a parachute opening, the wings spread gracefully, the descent slackened, and Hawkins floated down, down, down—until he landed in the center of the yard without a jar.

Really, I was amazed. It seemed to be either a special dispensation of Providence or an invention of Hawkins' which really worked.

A minute or two later he had labored back to my side, up the stairs, with the aerial fire-escape on his back.

"There!" he exclaimed. "What do you think of that?"

"It certainly seems to be a success."

"Well, rather! Now come up to the roof and have a drop with me. We'll go into the street this time, and—"

"Thank you, Hawkins," I said, positively. "Don't count me in on that. I'll wait for the fire before dabbling with your Anti-Fire-Fly."

"Oh, well, come with me, anyway. I'm going down once more. You've no idea of the sensation."

It was a considerable feat of engineering to persuade the Anti-Fire-Fly into passing through the scuttle, but Hawkins finally accomplished it, and pushed the contrivance to the edge of the roof.

"Now that thing will carry a small family with ease and safety," he said, proudly. "Just sit down in the basket and feel the roominess. Oh, don't be afraid. I'll come, too."

"Yes, it's very nice," I said, somewhat nervously, after crouching beside him for a moment. "I think I'll get out now."

"All ri—oh! Here! Wait!" cried Hawkins, grabbing my coat and pulling me back. Sit down!"

"What for?"

"The—the—the wings!" stuttered the inventor. "The—the wind!"

"Great Scott!" I shouted as a sudden breeze caught the wings and tilted the basket far to one side. "Let me out!"

"No, no!" shrieked Hawkins, wildly. "You'll break your neck, man! We're right on the edge of the roof now, and—"

And we were over the edge!

There was a street—miles below! Sickening dread choked me. I closed my eyes and gripped the basket as the accursed thing swayed from side to side and threatened every instant to precipitate us on the hard stones.

But it grew steadier presently. I looked about.

There was Hawkins hanging on for dear life, and white as death, but still serene. There, also, were numerous graveled roofs—some 20 feet below.

We were going up! Also, I was startled to note that the high wind was driving us down town at a rapid pace.

"See here, Hawkins!" I said. "What does this mean?"

"M-m-means that a big wind has caught us," replied the inventor, with a sickly smile.

"And when do you suppose it's going to let go of us?"

"Well—we—we may be able to catch one of those high roofs over there," murmured Hawkins, with assurance that did not reassure. "You—you know we can't go up very far, Griggs. This was not built for flying."

"For anything that wasn't made for the purpose, it's doing wonders," I retorted. Then a sudden puff sent us up fully ten feet. "Heavens! There goes our chance at those roofs!"

"Dear me! So it does!" muttered the inventor, as we sailed gracefully over the chimney-tops. "How unfortunate!"

"It'll be a lot more unfortunate when we pitch down into the street!" I snarled.

"Now, Griggs," said Hawkins, argumentatively, as we sped down town on the steadily rising wind, "why do you always take this pessimistic view of things? Can't you see—it is beyond your little mental scope to realize that we have fairly fallen over a great discovery, something that men have been seeking for ages? Don't you comprehend, from the very fact of our being up here and still rising, that these wings accidentally embody the vital principles of the dirigible—"

"Oh, dry up!" I growled, as we flitted swiftly past a church steeple.

Hawkins regarded me sadly, and I sadly regarded the street below and tried to assimilate the fact that we were 200 feet above the ground and rising at every puff of wind; that we were in a crazy clothes-basket, suspended from a crazier pair of wings, absolutely at the mercy of the breeze, and likely at any moment to drop to eternal smash!

I did not realize, without any effort, that my lower limbs were developing excruciating shooting pains from the cramped position.

The time passed very slowly. The houses below passed with astounding rapidity.

I thought of our wives, sitting calmly in my home, ignorant of our plight. I wondered what their sentiments would be when some kindly ambulance surgeon had brought home such fragments of Hawkins and me as might have been collected with a dust-pan and brush.

I wondered whether the accursed Anti-Fire-Fly would dump us out and flutter away into eternity, to leave our fate unexplained, or whether it would accompany us to our doom and be found gloating over the respective grease-spots that would represent all that was mortal of Hawkins and myself.

And at about this point in my meditations, I noted that we were sailing over Union square.

"Isn't it fine?" cried Hawkins, enthusiastically. "You never came down town like this before, Griggs."

"I never expect to again," Hawkins," I sighed.

"Why not? Why, Griggs, this thing is only the nucleus of my future airship, and yet see how it floats! Oh, I've thought it all out in the last five minutes. It's astonishing that it never occurred to me before. Now, these wings, you see, are so constructed—"

"See here, Hawkins," I said, "do you mean to say that you expect to get out of this thing alive?"

"Certainly," replied the inventor, in astonishment. "There's no danger. I can see that now, although I was a trifle startled at first. It's only a matter of minutes when we shall go near enough to one of those big office buildings to grab it and stop ourselves."

"And clamber down the side—20 or 30 stories?"

"And even if we can't land, we shan't fall. The construction of these wings is such—"

"Oh, hang the construction of your wings!" I cried. "We're going right toward the bay—suppose the wind dies down and lets us into the water?"

"Well, these wings are water-proof, you know," said Hawkins. "They might—"

"Yes, and the bay might dry up, so that we could walk back if we escaped being broken in pieces, Hawkins," I sneered.

Hawkins subsided. The breeze did not.

It was one of the most impolitely persistent breezes I have ever encountered. It seemed bent on landing us in New York harbor, and before many minutes we were suspended high above that expansive, and in some circumstances, charming body of water.

Furthermore, having wafted us something like a quarter of a mile from shore, it proceeded to die out in a manner which was, to say the least, disheartening.

Hawkins grew paler by perceptible shades as we progressed, ever nearer the water, and farther from hope; and it was not until I opened my mouth to vent a few last indivious criticisms of him and his methods that the inventor's face brightened.

"By Jove, Griggs! Look! That ferryboat! That fellow on the roof! He's got a boat-hook! Hey! Hey! Hey! you!"

The individual gazed aloft and nearly collapsed with astonishment.

"Catch us!" bawled the inventor, frantically. "Catch the basket with that hook! We want to come aboard! Hurry up!"

The boat was going in our direction, and rather faster. The man on the roof seemed to comprehend. He reached up with his hook. He leaped a couple of times in vain.

And then we felt a shock which told of our capture! I breathed a long, happy sigh.

In dealing with Hawkins' inventions, long, happy sighs are premature unless you are positive that your entire anatomical structure is complete, and likewise certain that the contrivance lies at your feet in a condition of total wreck.

The basket was suspended from a thin steel frame, from which several dozen stout cords rose to that idiotic pair of wings. When we were fairly caught, Hawkins cried:

"Now, Griggs, stand up and catch the frame and pull the whole business down with us. And you, down there, pull hard! Pull hard, now!"

I seized the steel frame on one side, Hawkins on the other, and we pulled. And the man with the boat-hook pulled. And at the psychological moment the wind rose afresh and pulled at the wings with a mighty pull!

Some seconds of dizzy straining in the air, and the clothes-basket portion of the Anti-Fire-Fly lay on the roof of the ferry-boat, while Hawkins and I hung far above, entangled in the cords and clutching them wildly and rising steadily once more!

"Great Caesar's ghost!" gurgled the inventor. "This is awful!"

"Awful!" I gasped when breath had returned. "It's—it's—"

"Lord! Lord! We're going straight for Staten Island. Don't move, Griggs."

"I can't," I said. "I'm caught tight here. Good-by, Hawkins."

"We're—we're not done for yet," quavered that individual. "We may hit land. But isn't—isn't it terrible?"

"Oh, no," I groaned. "It's all right. No more climbing down red-hot ladders through belching flames! No more throwing children from—"

"Don't joke, Griggs," wailed Hawkins. "I will say I'm sorry I got you into this."

"Thank you, Hawkins," I said, nearly strangled by a cord which persisted in twisting itself about my neck. "So am I."

Conversation lagged after that. For my part, I was too dazed and too firmly enmeshed in the cords to say much.

I fancy that the same applied to Hawkins, but he happened to be facing ahead, and now and then he called back bulletins of our progress.

"Getting nearer the island," he announced after some ten minutes of the agony.

A little later: "Thank Heaven! We're almost over land!"

And still later, when I had been choked and twisted almost into insensibility by the eccentric dives of the affair and the consequent tightening of the cords, he revived me with:

"By George, Griggs, we're sinking toward land!"

I managed to look downward. Hawkins had told the truth. The wind was indeed going down, and with it the remains of the Anti-Fire-Fly.

Beneath appeared a big factory, its chimney belching forth black smoke in disregard of the Sabbath, and we seemed likely to land within its precincts.

"I knew it! I knew it!" Hawkins cried joyfully. "We's safe, after all, just as I said. We'll drop just outside the fence."

"Thank the Lord," I murmured.

"No! No! We'll drop right on that heap of dirt!" predicted Hawkins, excitedly. "Yes, sir, that's where we'll drop. D'ye see that fellow wheeling a wheelbarrow toward the pile? Hey!"

The man glanced up in amazement.

"Farther down every minute!" pursued Hawkins. "I knew we'd be all right! Maybe the Anti-Fire-Fly isn't such a bad thing after all, eh?"

"Maybe not," I sighed. "But I'll take the red-hot ladder."

"Go ahead and take it," chattered the inventor. "We're not 30 feet from the ground and steering straight for that dirt-pile. Yes, sir, the wind's gone down completely. Hooray!"

"Hey, youse!" shouted the man with the wheelbarrow, somewhat excitedly.

"Well?" bawled Hawkins.

"Steer away from it!" continued the workman, waving his arms at the pile.

"We can't steer," replied Hawkins, cheerfully. "But it's all right."

"The poile! The poile! Sure, we've just drew the foire, an' thim's the hot coals! Be careful o' the cinder poile!"

"What did he say?" asked Hawkins, superciliously.

"'Be careful of the cinder pile,' I think."

"Oh, we won't hurt your old cinder pile!" called the inventor, jocosely, as the wreck of the Anti-Fire-Fly swooped down with a rush.

"But the cinders!" howled the man. "Bedad! They're into it! Mike! Mike! Bring the hose! The hose!"

And we were into it.

A final rush of air and we struck the pile with a thud. And for my part I had no sooner landed than I bounced to my feet with a shriek, for that cinder pile was about the hottest proposition it has ever been my misfortune to meet.

The cords were all about me, and as I pulled wildly in one direction, I could feel Hawkins pulling as wildly in the opposite.

"Let go! Let go, Griggs!" he screamed. "Come my way! Lord! I'm all afire! Come, quick!"

"I'm not going to climb back over that infernal heap!" I shouted. "You come this way!"

"But my feet! They're burning, and—"

A mighty stream of water knocked me headlong to the ground. Sizzling, steaming on the red-hot cinders, it caught Hawkins and hurled his panting person to the other side, Anti-Fire-Fly and all. Mike had arrived with the hose.

After a period of wallowing in water and mud I regained my feet.

Hawkins was already standing a little distance away, torn, scorched, drenched, black with cinders and staring wild-eyed about him.

"Why—why—Griggs, he mumbled, "what—did—we—"

"Oh, we flew away from fire with the Anti-Fire-Fly!" I said.

Such was the end of the Anti-Fire-Fly.

Attired in such of our own raiment as had survived the cinder pile and the hose, and in other bits of clothing contributed by kindly factory workmen, we took the next boat for New York, and a cab thereafter.

We reached home in time to see the ladies mounting the Hawkins' steps, presumably to investigate the reason for our prolonged inspection.

For a few moments they seemed quite incapable of speech. Mrs. Hawinks was the first to regain the use of her tongue.

"Herbert," she said, in an ominously calm tone, "what was it this time?"

Hawkins smiled foolishly.

"It was the Hawkins Anti-Fire-Fly," I said, spitefully. "Fly away from fire with the Anti-Fre-Fly, you know. Tell your wife about it, Hawkins."

Then Mrs. Hawkins addressed her husband and said—but let that pass.

We have all the essential facts of the case as it is. Moreover, a successful author told me last week that unhappy endings are in the worst possible taste just now.

SAMPLE OF CHINESE FUN.

Jokes in the Literature of the Celestials Much Like Those of the Present Day.

If there is any truth in what expert jesters tell us the world's stock of good, original jokes is ludicrously small—a dozen or two at the very outside. An early investigator into this momentous question, a certain Hierocles who lived some 1,500 years ago, put the number in his day at exactly 21. The researches of Hierocles probably did not extend so far eastward as China, so there is no impropriety in asking now whether some of the jokes which abound in the literature of the celestial empire are entitled to the honor of originality or not. Here are three specimens:

A careless barber, trimming a customer's ears—Chinese barbers pay particular attention to this part of the human anatomy—put his patient to great pain and uneasiness. "Are you doing my left ear now?" asked the victim. "No, sir; I've not quite finished the right ear yet." "Ah! I fancied you were trying to pass through to the left without going around."

A portrait painter without clients was advised by a friend to paint a likeness of himself and his wife and hang it in some conspicuous place, so that would-be customers might judge of his skill. He did so and his father-in-law the next time he called immediately saw the picture. "Pray," asked the visitor, "what woman have you represented there?" "Why, sir, do you not recognize your own daughter?" "My daughter!" was the indignant answer. "If you intend that to represent my daughter, how dare you paint her sitting thus intimately with a man whom I have never seen before and who must be an entire stranger to her?" The painter's feelings need not be described.

The gibes at doctors are innumerable. The following is a typical example:

One of the judges of the nether regions dispatched an imp to this world of ours to seek out and bring back a good doctor. "When," the imp was instructed, "you come to the house of a doctor before which you descry no complaining ghosts you will know you have found a man of the kind wanted." The messenger set out, but in front of every doctor's door he came to there was an immense throng of angry spirits proclaiming the wrongs they had suffered when in the flesh at the hands of the medicine man. Finally, however, he reached a house where there was but one solitary ghost flitting backward and forward. "This is my man," he said to himself; "he must surely be a clever fellow." When the imp came to make inquiries, however, he learned that the practitioner had barely been in practice for a day!—Grand Magazine.

HOME LIFE OF A PRINCESS

Writer Tells of Delightful Days Spent as Guest of Amelie Rives, the Authoress.

One who has recently visited Amelie Rives (Princess Troubetzkoy) at the beautiful Virginia estate, where she spends her winters with her mother and sisters, gives an attractive picture of the home life of the author of "Selene:"

"In the gloaming hour preceding dinner we had tea by the light of a log fire, in a big, square room, where everything was comforting, where nothing was false; yet where everything was reminiscent of homeful associations. It was not the chamber of state, but the general room of intimate reunion. The family life at Castle Hill has no intellectual affectations. Each member of the household has special obligations and duties that keep her busy, while the 'Princess o' Dreams' is the wondrous idol of them all. By candle-light we dined, at a big, round table, and in the mellow glow of the candelabra we looked our best. Not because we were formal in our elegance, but because we were harmoniously informal. After dinner we all adjourned to the cozy comfort of lamp light, and laughed and talked and even smoked our pipes until late. Our eyes and our minds were centered in the mood of the princess; not merely the guests, but her mother and sisters. The talk was always about something worth while, with ethical point and purpose—and there were no laggards. Yet it was nothing so painful as an 'intellectual evening.' When, at last, came time to say good-night, the transient guest, no longer an alien, retired serene in his conviction that Amelie Rives Troubetzkoy was well and strong and, above all, serene."

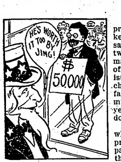
What It Costs to Keep the President of the United States—Recent Panama Trip Inexpensive—Most Powerful Battleship in the World to B: Built for Our Navy—Elephant Problem Solved.



HE'S WORTH IT TOO BY JING!
$ 50.000

WASHINGTON.—It is difficult to determine precisely what it costs his "fellow citizens" to keep the president of the United States, but it is safe to assert that it does not figure up more than two-fifths of a cent for each person in the country, man, woman and child. Compared with the cost of maintaining the head rulers of many imperialistic nations the expense attached to keeping the chief executive of this country is small. The royal families of England, Germany and Russia spend millions of dollars of government revenues every year and besides have set aside for their use large domains of lands and costly buildings.

Among the presidents of republics the one who costs his countrymen most per capita is the president of Hayti. The citizens of that nation pay 17-22 of a cent each for the maintenance of their ruler, while the fellow citizens of the president of Paraguay pay three-fourths of a cent each for keeping him. The cost of the president of France is three-tenths of a cent a head; that of the president of the Argentine republic seven-twentieths of a cent a head; that of the president of Mexico three-twentieths of a cent a head; that of the president of Chili three-tenths of a cent a head; that of the president of Bolivia one-fourth of a cent a head, and that of the president of Ecuador two-fifths of a cent a head.

For the present fiscal year the appropriations for the White House are something like these figures:

Salary of the president, $50,000; traveling expenses of the chief executive, $25,000; salaries of the executive office, $66,340; contingent expenses of the office, $20,000; care, repair, refurnishing, purchase horses, etc., $35,000; fuel for mansion, greenhouses and stable, $6,000; care and maintenance of conservatory and greenhouses, $9,000; extraordinary repairs to executive mansion, $35,000; lighting the grounds, fuel, pay of laborers, care of greenhouses, etc., $19,500; total, $265,840.

ITEMS NOT CHARGED TO THE WHITE HOUSE.

HE'S FANCY BUT HE COMES HIGH

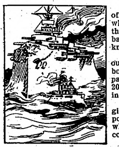
There are a number of salaries that properly belong to the White House, although carried on the rolls of other departments. The two secret service men assigned to the White House at all times are paid by the treasury. The salaries of about 30 police officers are paid by the district. These amount to probably $35,000 a year. If congress appropriated directly for the salaries of these men the total appropriations for the White House would mount up to over $300,000 for the present year. There are 18 privates and two sergeants of police constantly patrolling the White House grounds. In addition there are about ten police officers assigned to duty at the White House as doorkeepers. Most of them have been soldiers or sailors in the army or navy and have been selected by the district authorities for their strict attention to duty and general good judgment.

How much of the appropriation of $25,000 for traveling expenses made by the last congress had been drawn upon nobody outside the White House and treasury knows. Such matters are carefully guarded by treasury bookkeepers and auditors. The president, however, has made only three complete trips since the appropriation was made. One was to Oyster Bay, another to "Pine Knot," Va., his country place in that state, and his trip to Panama makes the third.

The purpose of the president, it is said, is to expend as little of the appropriation as possible during this fiscal year. It is probable that next summer he may go on a hunting trip and visit a number of cities and towns, but that will not be until after congress has adjourned in March.

The salaries of most of the servants at the White House—the domestic force, such as cooks, waiters, laundresses—are paid from appropriations made for the superintendent of public buildings and grounds.

MONSTER BATTLESHIP FOR OUR NAVY.



Either of the plans submitted by the bureau of construction and repair for the new battleship which is to be constructed, if carried out, will give the navy of the United States the most powerful battleship in the world, according to those who know what the plans are.

The plans, together with others submitted by outsiders, are now under consideration by a special board appointed by Secretary of the Navy Bonaparte. One plan provides for a vessel of exactly 20,000 tons displacement, and the other for a floating fort of 20,500 tons displacement.

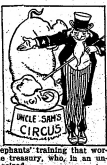
Either plan, it is confidently expected, will give to the American navy a warship far more powerful than the famous English Dreadnought, which has started all governments to rush the construction of huge ships.

The Dreadnought carries ten 12-inch guns, while its secondary battery is inconsiderable. One of the plans for the new American ship provides for ten 12-inch guns and the other for 12 12-inch guns. This second plan would give an astounding battery strength in a broadside fire, the most important consideration of 12 12-inch guns. The battery could be made possible by virtue of a new arrangement of turrets. In the plans for the 20,000-ton ship provision is made for ten 12-inchers mounted in double gun turrets, all on a center line, thus giving a broadside of all guns.

In the plans for the 20,500-ton vessel there are 12 12-inch guns in six turrets, all on the center line. Not all of the turrets, however, will be on the same deck, provision being made for the center turrets of the group to be 45 feet above the water line. The design also provides for 16 five-inch guns for torpedo defense, the battery to be protected by five inches of armor.

The most serious criticism of the designs for the ship is that none of the five-inch guns can be fired astern, and only two command a fire over the bow. This would tend to make the vessel vulnerable to torpedo attack from the stern, and would make defense against a torpedo attack straight ahead difficult.

UNCLE SAM SOLVES ELEPHANT PROBLEM.



A novel plan has been found by treasury officials to save the government the cost of feeding four healthy elephants several times daily during the next four months. When the officials, in enforcing the law against undervaluation were compelled to confiscate the four elephants owned by a showman named Thompson, the problem of feeding the animals until the next auction sale of the confiscated goods presented itself. It was solved by permitting Thompson to give bond for the safe return of the animals. He was permitted to take the animals on the road and the officials are hoping he will make enough money exhibiting them to pay the penalty for his offense and recover the elephants.

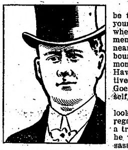
The four elephants in question are of the real circus variety that can stand on their heads, fire off cannon, waltz, and sit around a table and eat a course dinner. It was the dinner part of the elephants' training that worried James B. Reynolds, assistant secretary of the treasury, who, in an unguarded fit of official zeal, ordered the pachyderms seized.

As a protection to the American industry in infant elephants a duty of 20 per cent. ad valorem is levied on the big beasts. The four animals were brought into the port of New York some months ago by Thompson. He put a valuation of $6,000 on his herd, and, in order to avoid paying the duty, declared that he did not intend to keep them in the United States, but only wanted them to stay awhile for exhibition purposes. He put up a bond and took the elephants on their way to meet the youth of America.

The Thompson show got in Canada and he drew down his bond. But Thompson and his elephants came back, this time through the port of Buffalo. Show time was over and the value of the elephants had decreased, and they were declared to be worth only $2,500. But the memory of the customs service is long, and the $6,000 valuation put on them at New York was resurrected, and that resulted in their seizure.

PEOPLE TALKED ABOUT

KENTUCKY MAN WHO ALWAYS WINS



John Cripps Wickliff Beckham, age 37, is to be the next senator from Kentucky. He is the youngest senator-elect in the United States, and when he takes his seat he will be the youngest member. He has been governor of Kentucky for nearly seven years. He became governor of the bourbon commonwealth when he was just one month within the requisite age limit of 30 years. Having succeeded to the chair of the chief executive once through the death of Gov. William Goebel, he has been elected twice to succeed himself, a record without parallel in Kentucky.

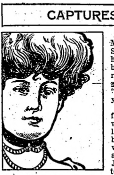
When Beckham first became governor he was looked upon as a man of unusual luck. He was regarded as "the accident of an accident," albeit a tragic one, he having succeeded Goebel because he was lieutenant governor when Goebel was assassinated.

But Beckham has long since demonstrated that it is not all good fortune for him. In the face of the most determined opposition, and a strong disposition on the part of the older politicians to oust him as a "young upstart," he has not only held his own but won every political battle he has fought. In retaining his post of governor of Kentucky he has met and defeated the most astute politicians of the state. He has swept ruthlessly from his path Joseph Blackburn and James B. McCreary, the senators from Kentucky. Blackburn tried to crush him. Instead Beckham sent him back to private life and sent Judge Thomas H. Paynter to the senate to succeed Blackburn. Then Beckham decided to go to the senate himself. Senator James B. McCreary, who was a member of congress before Beckham was born, was his opponent. When the Democratic primary returns came in it was soon seen that the youthful Beckham had added another victory to his list and McCreary's scalp to his belt.

Beckham is certainly a political prodigy. In addition to the fact that he goes to the United States senate at such an early age, it must be remembered that he has won the Democratic nomination, which is equivalent to election, on the temperance issue. That he should do this in Kentucky, of all states, will cause the outside world to wonder. And Kentucky, which has 253 distilleries and 82 dry counties in paradoxical conjunction, has shown that it is a temperance state by sending Beckham to the United States senate. In his campaign Beckham met the bitter opposition of the whisky interests.

Beckham was born in Bardstown, Ky., November, 1869. He was the grandson of Gov. Wickliff, and comes of one of the oldest families in Kentucky. His mother has the distinction of being the daughter of a governor of Kentucky. Beckham had a predilection for politics and when 11 years old won his first election as page in the Kentucky legislature. He has never been beaten in his life.

CAPTURES EUROPEAN SOCIETY



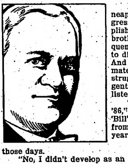
Countess Carlo Dentice di Frasso, formerly Miss Georgine Wilde, daughter of Mrs. Henry Siegel, of New York, and now but 18 years of age, has captivated the courts and capitals of Europe by her attractiveness of person and manner. She retains the simple unaffectedness which was her grace when a year ago Elisha Dyer, Jr., said; "She is the most attractive girl I have met in ten years."

Count di Frasso belongs to one of the oldest families of the Roman nobility, noted for its wealth, power and influence. The mother, the late Princess di Frasso, was of the Hungarian nobility, and it was her sister, Countess Sophie, who was the mother of Archduke Francis Ferdinand, at present heir apparent of Emperor Francis Joseph of Austria. Thus it is that our little Countess Georgine is first cousin of the future emperor of Austria.

After the marriage the count took his young bride to the continent, where she was presented at the various courts of Europe and made a most favorable impression. During the summer the young couple spent much of their time at San Vita, the Frasso palace in Vienna. While here the young countess became a decided favorite with the Austrian court.

During the visit of the German emperor in Austria last summer he and his suite were entertained by Count Vilezeck, and were included in the royal party to meet the emperor.

"BILL" NYE'S PREDICTION COMES TRUE



Frank M. Nye is a prominent attorney of Minneapolis, a noted orator, a former editor, a congressman-elect—but outshining all of his accomplishments is the fact that he is "Bill" Nye's brother. "Tell us about 'Bil,'" is the cry that frequently greets him when he mounts the platform to discuss some phase of politics, law or business. And when he does tell about "Bill," of the intimate boyhood days in Maine and early youthful struggles side by side in Wisconsin with the gentle, kindly and brilliant humorist, his hearers listen with rapt attention to his every word.

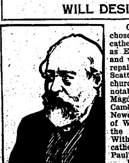
"When I came to Minnesota in the spring of '86," said Mr. Nye the other day, "my brother 'Bill' said to me: 'Frank, you'll be congressman from some place in or about Minneapolis in ten years.' Bill missed it by just ten."

Someone asked him if he was an orator in those days.

"No, I didn't develop as an orator then, or in a college debating society," he said: "The reason is simple. I never went to college. I don't know that I was a born orator, even though I was born in Maine. I guess it came naturally. Cooperation with 'Bill' helped some. It helped us both. While we were boys on the farm doing chores and men's work, I used to make speeches to Bill. He seized the opportunity to cut in with witty remarks until he became fairly 'smart.' He got a reputation as a humorist by practicing on me and I had the honor of being his brother."

Mr. Nye is a Republican. He believes in law enforcement and regulation of trusts and the tariff. He also thinks that these things can best be done by the Republican party.

WILL DESIGN NEW CHURCH



George Frederick Bodley, who has been chosen to design the new Protestant Episcopal cathedral at Washington, long has been regarded as England's foremost ecclesiastical architect, and when any notable church is to be restored or repaired he is consulted as a matter of course. Scattered up and down the land are many churches that he has built. Among his most notable achievements are the new buildings of Magdalen college, Oxford, and King's college, Cambridge; Clumber church, built for the duke of Newcastle; Eccleston church, built for the duke of Westminster; the chapel of Marlborough, and the restored screen of Winchester cathedral. With the late Thomas Garner he designed the cathedral in Tasmania and the reredos in St. Paul's cathedral.

But never in his life has he had such an opportunity to display his skill and creative power as will be afforded him by the work with which he has been intrusted at the American capital. He hopes to make it his masterpiece—the monument by which he will be remembered by posterity. Although in his eightieth year, he is as eager as a boy to get to work on it, and will start for America in a couple of weeks.

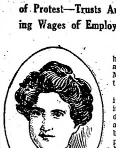
Gossip from Gotham.

Book of Mrs. Parsons Advocating Trial Marriages Creates Storm of Protest—Trusts Are Trying to Check Antagonism by Raising Wages of Employes—Other Interesting Notes.



NEW YORK.—No recently published book has aroused such a general storm of condemnation as that which has been centered on "The Family," Mrs. Elsie Clews Parsons' sensational contribution to the literature of sociology.

Her startling suggestion of trial or time limited marriages as a safeguard against marital infelicity meets with nothing but the most shocked disapproval. Out of scores of representative men and women who have expressed themselves on the book and the theories it expounds, there was complete unanimity of opinion that the inculcation of Mrs. Parsons' view would be disastrous morally and socially.

In addition to her trial marriage suggestion, Mrs. Parsons' book goes deeply into the marriage relation as it exists, tracing its development from the beginning of things. She sets forth a mass of data in proof of the assertion that laxity has been a ruling characteristic of the marital relation in all countries since the dawn of civilization. Mrs. Parsons treats the subject in all its bearings with the dispassionate calm of a scientific investigator.

Mrs. Parsons has thus far had absolutely nothing to say regarding her book and will have nothing to say. Neither has or will Mr. Parsons. In sharp contrast to the reticence of Mr. Parsons and his wife is the continued discussion of those holding opposite views.

Constituents of the congressman are aghast. A movement is already on foot to defeat him for reelection, although he has just been reseated by a triumphant vote.

"What will President Roosevelt say?" is a query agitating many. Parsons, by the dethronement of Platt and Odell, became leader of the New York State Republican organization. It was through the backing of the president that this post was won, and the doctrines of the book are so utterly at variance with the doctrines vigorously preached by the president on many occasions that interesting occurrences are looked for from the president in the near future.

GREAT CORPORATIONS RAISING WAGES.

Practically all the great railroad and industrial corporations of the country, the affairs of which are directed from this city, have decided to increase the prevailing rate of wages to their employes. It was predicted that the action of the Pennsylvania railroad management in increasing the wages of its army of 165,000 men nearly $12,000,000 would soon be followed by all the important railroad and industrial corporations of the United States. The Standard Oil company has decided to increase the wages of its 60,000 employes in different parts of the United States. Information also reached the city from Montana that the Amalgamated Copper company, which employes nearly 15,000 men in the mines of Montana, has already made a proposal to its employes increasing wages about ten per cent.

The United States Steel Corporation, which advanced the wages of its army of 175,000 employes in March, 1905, without solicitation from the men, is also considering the question of a wage increase. One reason for the general tendency of the corporation managers to increase the wages of the workmen was brought out by a trade agency, which reported that the present cost of living was the highest in 20 years.

Another reason given by financiers is that the industrial corporations are all in a highly prosperous condition and the scores of plants are being worked to their full capacity and under high pressure.

Men of prominence in the financial world saw in the concerted action of the great corporations a desire to checkmate the growing tide of antagonism to corporations, evidence of which was brought out in the recent election.

NIGHTIES WORTH $1,100 FOR GOTHAM WOMEN.

NIGHTGOWN ONLY $1200.00
COME ON DEARIE!

"Night robe, $1,1 00." For this mere trifle you may buy as beautiful a bit of lingerie as ever graced the person of a royal princess.

In fact, no member of royalty wears more exquisite lingerie than is being daily imported for the use of the New York woman. In a glass case in one of the biggest stores in New York, the bit of lingerie marked $1,100 proves to the uninitiated that there is no limit to her extravagance.

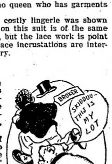
The gown is made of hand woven linen batiste, in whose fine and indescribable sheerness there is not a single flaw. The $1,100 robe de nuit's splendor lies in the Brussels lace and hand embroidery with which it is trimmed. The gown is necessarily plain from the point of Broadway showiness. The lace has been made on a form to fit the yoke, and the incrustations are surrounded by exquisite rose vines of embroidery so fine as to be hardly appreciated by the unknowing ones. Below the embroidery, which falls in tiny roses below the bust, the finest of tucks confine the fullness which is necessary for the body of the gown. The sleeves, made of Brussels lace, are short and flowing, and hand embroidered. Around the hem, which is the finest hemstitching, runs a delicate hand embroidered vine of roses and leaves.

"Who will buy a gown like that?" the head of the department was asked.

"Not the millionaires," she replied, "but the very finest people. Only people who know beautiful lace and embroidery and hand work could appreciate it. Women whose mothers and grandmothers before them have had an appreciation of exquisite laces buy these. There is no queen who has garments made of finer material than this gown."

The New York woman's love of beautiful and costly lingerie was shown in a three piece suit selling for $2,000. The work on this suit is of the same fine hemstitching in putting the garments together, but the lace work is point venise in a thirteenth century design. The deep lace incrustations are intermingled with the most exquisite of hand embroidery.

$750,000 LOT IS PLAYGROUND FOR A DOG.



One of the few unimproved lots facing on Fifth avenue, indeed, the only one in the business district, is a 50-foot inclosure between Thirty-ninth and Fortieth streets, on the west side of the avenue. An old-fashioned red brick house adjoining it is the home of Miss Josephine J. Wendell, an elderly woman who owns the lot.

Until recently Miss Wendell never thought of selling the idle plot next her house. It made no great difference to her that every real estate operator in town had his eye on that "parcel," as the brokers called it, and that they were ready to give $600,000 for it.

The other day a real estate man got up his courage to suggest a sale to Miss Wendell.

"Why, yes," she responded, rather to his surprise, "the land ought to be earning some income, I suppose. I suppose I'm really foolish to hold it unimproved."

The real estate man ventured to suggest that he had $500,000 which he could offer for the lot. Miss Wendell promptly said that she thought the lot was worth at least $600,000. The broker said that he would consult his client.

On the morrow he returned with the consent of his client to Miss Wendell's price. He already saw his $6,000 commission locked away in the safe, and was congratulating himself inwardly, when the elderly woman "raised the ante" $50,000.

This took the broker by surprise, but he had his customer's authorization to pay as much as $750,000 if necessary.

"Do you know," said Miss Wendell, as the real estate man was about to ask her where the deeds could be delivered, "I don't believe I will sell that lot. It's the only place Trixie has to exercise. Trixie is my little dog. I wouldn't like to have him stay in the house all day. He likes the open air. Trixie is so used to that little garden patch. I think I'll keep it for him."

PIPE DREAMS, SAYS SENATOR WARREN

SPECIAL AGENT MYENDORFF'S ACCUSATIONS ARE PRONOUNCED FALSE.

Wyoming Man Tells of His Meetings with Man Who Makes Sensational Charges—More Testimony in Coal Land Case.

Washington, Dec. 1.—Senator Warren, who arrived in the city Friday, made the following statement in contradiction of the affidavit of Special Agent Myendorff, of the general land office, made at Salt Lake City, in which Mr. Warren and his colleague, Senator Clark, were charged with conspiring with others to put a stop to investigations into charges made in connection with the entry of coal lands owned by the Union Pacific Railway company.

"If Myendorff made such an affidavit he must have been indulging in pipe dreams. I am informed that Senator Clark never saw the man and never had any communication with him oral or written.

"The idea of Senator Clark needing Myendorff's assistance in his reelection is absurd, as Wyoming was practically solid for him and no candidate opposing.

"As for myself, I never knew that such a man as Special Agent Myendorff existed until some time in 1903 or in 1904, when I received a letter from him saying that he wished to see me; that he had heard that somebody had been writing me to his discredit; and asking if I would not let him know when I was in Cheyenne or Denver so that he might call; that we were brother soldiers of the civil war, etc., etc.

"In accordance with the request, I some months afterward informed him that I expected to be in Denver a few days later, sending him the date. He called at my hotel, asking that I help to get him promotion to the position of special agent in charge of a place in the consular service, because neither his work nor the climate of Colorado entirely agreed with him, that the altitude there made him nervous, etc. He based his request to me on the grounds of his civil war record, his friendship for my friends, Mark Hanna, Elmer Dover and others.

"He appealed strongly to my sympathy and I consented to mention his case to his superiors. He then volunteered the information that he had a lot of irregular and illegal coal claim cases made by parties in Colorado for land in Wyoming, said to be in the interest of the Union Pacific Coal company. He asked my advice how to proceed. I suggested that he follow the law and his instructions.

Denies the Letter Story.

"I never read Myendorff any private letters of his to Commissioner Richards and have no knowledge that such ever existed.

"On a later occasion when I happened to be in Denver on business, Myendorff again called on me and again solicited my assistance. I think he called on me once afterward at my committee room in Washington, but I had no conversation with him beyond the customary salutation I would extend to any visitor of my acquaintance. Some time afterward I read in the Denver newspapers of Myendorff's sensational attempt to commit suicide and later on that he had left Denver, and so I do not know whether or not he ever received the coveted position.

"As to the subject matter of the testimony referred to, I have had no connection with coal or other land entries of the Union Pacific or any other railroad or other company, and no interest whatever in coal further than an ambition to have the people of my country get plenty of coal, of good quality and at reasonable prices; and that the world might know of the vast deposits of coal underlying the soil.

"And further than this I desire to say that anyone who accuses me otherwise, speaks falsely—no matter who, when or where."

Hears of Secret Tariff.

Salt Lake City, Dec. 1.—Interstate Commerce Commissioner E. E. Clarke, continuing his investigation of the coal trade in the Inter-Mountain country and their methods of acquiring coal properties, devoted most of the morning session Friday to the Denver & Rio Grande system and its affiliated coal companies.

Charles Livingston, former clerk at Sunnyside for the Utah Fuel company and the Wasatch store, both Gould companies, testified that previous to August 1, last, both companies enjoyed what amounted to a secret tariff of all material shipped to the mines over the Denver & Rio Grande lines. The companies also received concessions over railroad lines, he said.

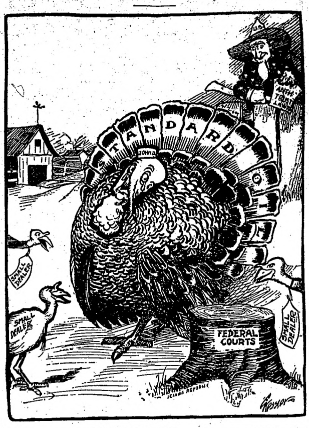
THE BIG GOBBLER.



TO MASS FLEETS ON THE PACIFIC

BUREAU OF NAVIGATION PLANS CONCENTRATION OF WARSHIPS FOR EMERGENCY.

Grade of Vice Admiral Will Be Revived If Recommendation of Chief Converse Is Adopted—Navy Wants Cash for Amusements.

Washington, Dec. 1.—Completed plans for the organization of the fighting vessels of the navy in two fleets for service on the Atlantic and Pacific coasts of the United States in such manner that the whole force may be readily mobilized in cases of emergency, is announced by Rear Admiral Converse, chief of he bureau of navigation of the navy department, in his annual report. Admiral Converse says that owing to the United States' responsibilities in the Philippines and the far east generally an adequate naval force is needed in the Pacific ocean.

To Merge Fleets.

By January 1 it is expected the Asiatic fleet and the Pacific squadron will be merged into one Pacific fleet under the supreme command of a flag officer of the highest rank, in the same manner as the Atlantic fleet is now organized.

The assignment of the ships of the battle line to Atlantic waters and of cruisers and gunboats to Pacific waters is in accordance with present requirements.

The grade of vice admiral will be revived if the navy department adopts the recommendation made by Admiral Converse. He says at least two vice admirals should be created for the commanders of the Atlantic and Asiatic fleets, who will soon have under them rear admirals and a large number of ships.

Entertainments Cost Much.

Congress will be asked by the bureau of navigation to make an appropriation for official entertainments on board naval vessels when sent to foreign shores. It will be argued that in cultivating friendly and diplomatic relations in foreign countries naval officers are compelled to spend a large part of their own pay for entertainments. By other countries ample provision is made for such expenses.

Admiral Converse says it has been a matter of consideration whether it would not add to the efficiency of the service if marines were withdrawn from all battleships. The idea of the bureau is that the bluejackets are drawn from the same class as the marines, and are able to perform efficiently the services now assigned to the latter. It is said that the presence of marines suggests to the enlisted men of the navy that the former are those for police duty and their presence frequently is resented.

William Fisher, Inventor, Dead.

Minneapolis, Minn., Nov. 30.—A special from Marshalltown, Ia., says that William Fisher, an inventor of steam contrivances in use in every civilized country on the globe, is dead, aged 68. Death resulted from pneumonia. He was prominent in state manufacturing circles, having been treasurer of the Iowa Association of Stationary Engineers, and built the waterworks systems of Clinton, Anamosa and Muscatine.

Man and Child Freeze to Death.

New Rockford, N. D., Nov. 30.—Vincent Spilner and wife and two children, of Eastern Wells county, lost their way while driving home from a neighbor's, and Mr. Spilner and one child were frozen to death. Mrs. Spilner is in a precarious condition as a result of exposure.

THREE BANKS CLOSE UP

INSTITUTIONS IN M'DONOUGH COUNTY, ILL., SUSPEND.

All Conducted by C. V. Chandler—Notices Posted Say They Are Short of Ready Cash.

Peoria, Ill., Dec. 1.—Three banking institutions in McDonough county, conducted by C. V. Chandler, of Macomb, closed their doors Friday. Notices to the effect that the banks were short of ready cash were posted on the doors of all the banks Friday morning. The decision to close was reached Thursday upon an examination of the books by Mr. Chandler himself.

The banks are: The Bank of Macomb, conducted by C. V. Chandler & Co., having a deposit of $450,000 and capitalized at $50,000; the Chandler & Imes bank at Colchester, capitalized at $25,000, having a deposit of $200,000, and the Chandler & Smith bank of Bardolph, capitalized at $25,000, with $50,000 in deposits.

The money of the depositors in all three banks has been invested through Mr. Chandler, the senior member of the private banking firm in McDonough county real estate, and the immediate cause of suspension of the three institutions is given as a lack of ready cash. The Macomb bank stood good for the payment of the bonds of the Macomb and Western Illinois Electric railway, and when the bondholders made a demand for their money they absorbed all the ready cash of the three institutions.

The following notice appeared on the doors of all three banks, signed by C. V. Chandler and the other members of the firms in the respective towns:

"This bank is closed pending negotiations subject to the conversion of the property into ready cash. The bank is solvent and all depositors will be paid in full. There is ample property to meet all obligations and all that is necessary is a reasonable amount of time to convert the holdings into money."

OTTO YOUNG IS DEAD.

One of Chicago's Leading Capitalists Passes Away.

Chicago, Dec. 1.—Otto Young, 62 years old, one of Chicago's leading capitalists and landowners, died at 1:30 o'clock Friday afternoon at his country home at Lake Geneva.

Not since the death of Marshall Field almost a year ago has there come such a shock to the Chicago business and financial world as this unexpected news caused. It now develops, however, that Mr. Young had suffered with tuberculosis of the lungs for five years. He was obliged to release his active hold on affairs five weeks ago, but it was not thought the attack would prove fatal. He was afflicted with diabetes also.

Mr. Young's fortune is estimated at $17,000,000. His holdings of central business property in Chicago were exceeded only by those of Marshall Field and the Levi Z. Leiter estates. Up to the time of his death he had been planning the erection of a $10,000,000 hotel in Michigan avenue. The idea had become his hobby and he intended it to be the finest hotel in the world. It is believed he left some provision in his will for the carrying out of the project.

Fatal Accident in Bloomington.

Bloomington, Ill., Dec. 1.—Vernon Stewart, was killed, W. D. Sutton and Walter Chapman were probably fatally injured and a dozen other persons were hurt Friday night when a Chicago & Alton freight train backed into a Lake Erie & Western passenger train that was standing in the Union station.

LIKE A FAIRY TALE.

The Story of Postum Cereal in Words and Pictures.

The growth of the Postum Cereal Co. is like a fairy tale, but it is true, every word of it.

"The Door Unbolted" is the title of a charming little booklet just issued by the Company which tells, and illustrates, the story of this remarkable growth. It takes the reader from the little white barn in which the business was started Jan. 1, 1895, through the palatial offices and great factory buildings of the "White City" that comprise Postumville, Battle Creek, Mich.

The little white barn, so carefully preserved, is a most interesting building, for it represents the humble beginning of one of the country's greatest manufacturing enterprises of today, an enterprise that has grown from this little barn to a whole city of factory buildings within but little more than ten years.

No less interesting is the quaint official home of the Postum Cereal Co. The general office building of Mr. Post and his associates is a reproduction of the Shakespeare house at Stratford-on-Avon, and upon the house and its furnishings has been expended vast sums of money, until the rooms are more like the drawing rooms of the mansions of our multi-millionaires than like offices.

That Mr. Post has believed thoroughly in the idea of giving to his employes attractive and healthful work rooms is proven not only by the general office building of the Company and its furnishings, but by his factories as well, and of all of these things this beautiful little booklet tells the interesting story. It will be sent to anyone on request.

LOW WAGES IN RUSSIA.

The extreme poverty and the low standard of living of peasants from whom the Russian agricultural laborers are recruited assure a low level of wages for agricultural labor. The average wages will appear almost incredibly low from an American point of view, notwithstanding the general complaints of the estate holders concerning the unreasonable demands of the laborers.

According to an official investigation embracing the decade of 1882-1891, the average annual wages for a male agricultural worker in Russia were less than $32 and for a female worker less than $18. To this must be added the cost of subsistence, which is equally low, being on an average $24 for a male and $22 for a female worker for a whole year; so that the average cost of employing a laborer for the entire year is equal to only $55 for the male and $40 for the female.

The wages for the summer season of five months are almost equal to the annual wages, being $22 for the male and $13 for the female laborer.

Checked Attempt at Monopoly.

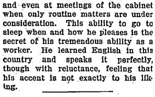
Trusts were sometimes dealt with summarily in old England. For instance, the records of the Brewers' company show that "on Monday, July 30, 1422, Robert Chichele, the mayor of London, sent for the masters and 12 of the most worthy of our company to appear at the Guildhall for selling dear ale. After much dispute about the price and quantity of malt, wherein Whityngtone, the late mayor, declared that the brewers had ridden into the country and forestalled the malt, to raise its price, they were convicted in the penalty of £20 ($100), which objecting to, the masters were ordered to be kept in prison in the chamberlain's custody until they should pay it, or find security for the payment thereof."

Able to Command Sleep.

With Georges Clemenceau, the new French premier, sleep is a mere matter of volition, in which facility he resembles Gladstone and the great Napoleon. He drops off to sleep at any odd moment—in his private carriage and even at meetings of the cabinet when only routine matters are under consideration. This ability to go to sleep when and how he pleases is the secret of his tremendous ability as a worker. He learned English in this country and speaks it perfectly, though with reluctance, feeling that his accent is not exactly to his liking.

Rigid Rules for Chauffeurs.

According to new regulations in France, no one will in future be granted an automobile license who is not able to prove, in addition to the possession of the necessary technical knowledge, exemption from any physical infirmity which would tend to involve unfitness for the control of an automobile. Persons whose eyesight is impaired, whose hearing is not acute, whose hand is rendered unsteady by drinking habits or who suffer from fits of nervousness will not be allowed to add to the list of accidents.



Lesson Others Might Learn.

In a railroad train Bishop Brooks of Boston leaned across the aisle and toward an intelligent looking gentleman, and asked:

"What were you going to remark?"

"I wasn't going to remark anything."

"But you looked at me, and seemed about to say something to me."

"Yes, I am said to be very deceptive that way. I used to say things and make remarks as soon as I thought them. I have often thought I had something to say, and discovered after I had said it that I ought to have kept my mouth shut."

Deafness Cannot Be Cured

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by Catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars, free.

Mix Soap With Dough.

From a communication read to the Association of Belgian Chemists it seems that continental bakers are in the habit of mixing soap with their dough to make their bread and pastry nice and light. The quantity of soap varies greatly. In fancy articles like waffles and fritters it is much larger than in bread.

Hammocks in Sleeping Cars.

In Nova Scotia the experiment has been tried of running a train with hammocks instead of the usual bunks in the sleeping cars. It was a great success.

GAINED 34 POUNDS

Persistent Anæmia Cured by Dr. Williams' Pink Pills After Other Remedies Had Failed.

"When I began taking Dr. Williams' Pink Pills," says Mrs. Nathaniel Field, of St. Albans, Somerset county, Maine, "I was the palest, most bloodless person you could imagine. My tongue and gums were colorless and my fingers and ears were like wax. I had two doctors and they pronounced my trouble anæmia. I had spells of vomiting, could not eat, in fact, did not dare to, I had such distress after eating. My stomach was filled with gas which caused me awful agony. The backache I suffered was at times almost unbearable and the least exertion made my heart beat so fast that I could hardly breathe. But the worst of all was the splitting neuralgia headache which never left me for seven weeks. About this time I had had several numb spells. My limbs would be cold and without any feeling and the most deathly sensations would come over me.

"Nothing had helped me until I began taking Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, in fact, I had grown worse every day. After I had taken the pills a short time I could see that they were benefiting me and one morning I awoke entirely free from pain. The distress after eating disappeared and in three weeks I could eat anything I wanted and suffer no inconvenience. I also slept soundly. I have taken several boxes of the pills and have gained in weight from 120 to 154 pounds and am perfectly well now."

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills cure anæmia because they actually make new blood. For rheumatism, indigestion, nervous headaches and many forms of weakness they are recommended even if ordinary medicines have failed. They are sold by all druggists, or will be sent postpaid, on receipt of price, 50 cents per box, six boxes for $2.50, by the Dr. Williams Medicine Company, Schenectady, N. Y.

Rural Routes.

Minneapolis—Although probably not one of them ever thought of such a thing, Minnesota's rural route mail carriers travel enough each year to circle the earth 460 times. They do not really drive across the ocean into Europe, thus making the circle, but the combined force of carriers during a year covers in the neighborhood of 11,500,000 miles in their travel through the state.

There are 1,463 rural routes in Minnesota, each route averaging about twenty-five miles. Thus in a day the carriers cover about 37,000 miles, which is almost half the entire wagon road mileage in the state. On an average of twenty-five miles a day, one carrier would in a year's time travel 7,825 miles, not including Sundays, but figuring on 313 days for a year.

As the circumference of the earth is about 25,000 miles and 11,500,000 miles are made each year by the 1,463 carriers, the distance around the globe is made 460 times during one year. In one day the carriers make 37,000 miles, which would take them around the earth once and a half.

Minnesota has 79,000 miles of road within its borders, half of which is covered by the rural carriers daily.

Two Ahead.

St. Paul—Two candidates on the republican state ticket have been elected by larger pluralities than John A. Johnson received for governor. E. T. Young, attorney general, will have a plurality of nearly 85,000 and State Auditor S. G. Iverson will have close ot 80,000. Gov. Johnson's majority, based on complete though unofficial returns from all the counties, is about 72,600, while Iverson and Young have a larger plurality than that in a list of seventy-five counties, and it is known that their majorities will be increased by the returns from those counties.

Seventy-six counties, including the three large cities, give 159,380 votes for Iverson and 83,510 for A. E. Aarnes, a plurality of 75,870 for Iverson. Seventy-five counties give E. T. Young 159,146 votes and John Dwan 81,005, a plurality of 78,141 for Young. The counties that have not been heard from are strong republican counties and the incomplete returns from them indicated that Young's plurality will lack very little of 85,000.

River Work.

Winona—Captain J. D. Du Shane, who has charge of the river improvement work between Winona and St. Paul, has finished for the season and his fleet is now in winter quarters in Fountain City bay. He says that on account of the small appropriation the work was not begun until in August, and from that time until the present month the fleet has been busy in this section, especially at Beef slough bar, which has been one of the worst stretches along the upper river. About $35,000 was expended at that point, the channel was cut thru the bar, the old wing dams were raised and ten new wing dams were constructed. The channel will now be from four to six feet in depth in times of low water. A larger appropriation is needed for next year to carry on the work successfully.

Mineral Leases.

Duluth—Two mineral prospecting leases were sold by the state auditor at good prices. Both of them were located in Cook county, near the Gunflint iron mine. The leases were put on sale Nov. 12, and three applications were made for each lease. According to law when more than one applies the lease must be sold to the highest bidder among the applicants, and at the sale yesterday J. H. Dight of Duluth purchased the fraction of the northeast quarter of section 25-65-5 for $550, and the northwest quarter of the same section for $503. The other applicants were W. D. Washburn, Jr., and Helen G. Brockhurst.

Ticket sales at the last Minnesota state fair reached the sum of $152,511.72, as compared with $134,736.85 in 1905, or a gain of about $18,000. This showing was made in the face of an unusually bad year when competition in the form of a large gathering with low railroad rates just before the fair, and bad weather which prevented the farmers from turning out, might naturally have resulted in a decrease in receipts.

Hamline—Planned to meet the needs of men of mature years who are busy on the farm the greater part of the year, the department of agriculture at the University of Minnesota, has announced the program of the seventh annual "short course for farmers." The course is designed to keep the farmer in closer relation with recent investigations, discoveries and methods related to his business and has been one of the most successful features connected with the Minnesota agricultural school.

Virginia—Preparations for winter work on the Duluth, Rainy Lake & Winnipeg road are being pushed rapidly forward. A tote road running parallel to the right of way from Ericsbury to Beaver camp has been constructed and will be used for hauling supplies as soon as it freezes up.

Minneapolis—For the last ten days over $1,150 have been stolen from people entering the Minneapolis & St. Louis trains at the local station, and Frank Colwell, the railroad's special detective has been puzzled to account for the numerous thefts, until he caught a man in the act of "frisking" a fellow traveler Sunday night.

St. Paul—Steps will be taken at the next session of the legislature to harmonize the state and national pure food laws. This will be done insofar as it is possible, but under no consideration will any good point in the state law be sacrificed to meet the national law. POULTRY
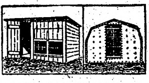
AND BEES

CHEAP HOUSE OF PIANO BOXES

How They Can Easily Be Converted Into Serviceable Chicken House.

Piano boxes can easily be procured at a low cost and cheaply converted into good houses for small flocks. The cut shows two styles of houses. The one at the right of the picture is made of two boxes set back to back. The top and back of each are taken off and will give enough material to close in the ends and roof, also the floor. The top of one can be cut down for a door and the houses should be set the distance apart of the width of the door. In the other end place a window, or the same may be put in the front. To make the house warmer cover with roofing paper. This makes an ideal colony house for 10 hens, or individual brooder house.



Piano Box Poultry House.

Another plan of construction is shown at the left of the cut. This is a smaller house, built of one box. The front is removed and extended in height. For brooder house for small chicks the plan may be reversed, says the Farm and Home, and the front of the house made the height of the back of the box. Two small sash and a door complete the arrangement.

KEEPING OUT MITES.

How the Poultry Raiser Can Keep His Hen House Clean.

The successful poultry raiser has learned how to keep out mites. It may well be doubted if any successful poultry raiser can be found whose houses are teeming with mites. Among the ways of keeping off the mites are the following:

Have a house that is light and large enough for the flock, and see to it that it is well ventilated.

Have the roosts, nests, dropping boards and all fixtures removable, so they can be cleaned perfectly, easily and often.

Do not permit filth of any kind to accumulate in this house, but make sure that it is cleaned often.

The advice given by some is to treat the house once in two weeks to a dusting with air-slaked lime and sulphur.

The boxes for the sitting hens should be washed in kerosene or crude petroleum before being used in the hatching operations The straw in such boxes should be burned after the hen is through sitting.

Lastly, watch the entire poultry establishment to make sure that mites do not get a start.

Hay for Poultry.

The suggestion that hay makes a good winter food for poultry would have been ridiculed a few years ago, but experiments have proved that clover hay is now almost a necessary portion of a hen's cold weather diet. Clover hay for fowls should be cut very fine, not over half an inch in length, steamed and scalded and fed once a day. A small quantity of corn meal and bran sprinkled over the cut hay will improve it. One reason clover is such an excellent food for hens is that it is rich in lime, a substance the hens require in providing the shells for eggs. It is about equal to corn as a flesh producer and contains nearly 30 times as much lime. It is plentiful on all farms and requires but little time in preparation. After the green food is gone it will keep the hens in laying condition and increase the production of eggs.

Poultry and Bee Notes.

Carelessness in handling poultry will ruin the finest flock in a short time.

Nitrogen may be the costliest or the cheapest element of fertility, as you like it.—C. E. T.

Paint the poultry house and have it an addition to the looks of the farm rather than something that detracts from the appearances.

Scratchivity is a virtue to be encouraged in the hen because upon it largely depends layity, and that is what most of us want.

If a cellar stands too near the freezing point for the bees, bring the temperature up by making the cellar closer; but there will be better ventilation and better air by bringing the temperature up at such times by means of as mall fire.

Our Domestic Turkey.

While there are differences of opinion regarding the origin of our domestic turkey, it is currently believed that it came directly from the wild turkey of the United States and Canada. One writer expresses the opinion that the original variety imported into England in 1520 came from a variety that formerly existed in the West Indies and was afterwards exterminated by the natives. This is guesswork. There is apparently no good reason for going out of the way to hunt for any other origin than that currently accepted. What is known as the domestic turkey crosses freely with the wild variety, thus establishing a close relationship as having existed in the past.

SQUAB FARMING TRUTHS.

Facts Gleaned from Thirty Years' Experience.

Squab farming has developed in the last ten years into an industry of considerable importance, and so far there is no "trust" connected with it.

It is important, before going into the industry, that a fair statement be made of what the financial returns may be. For while the work among the birds may to many people be the most delightful and fascinating of all rural occupations, still serious disappointment will be met if only the glowing promises of the boomers are read.

Much of the squab farming literature disseminated by those having breeding birds to sell would indicate that to obtain one of their beautifully illustrated booklets and to buy some birds from them, is all that is required to assure complete success and large profits. That is very far from the truth.

If one is fond enough of the work really to give the closest attention to his birds until he knows they are properly mated (and this requires a great deal of time and patience even from the most experienced), and then will daily continue to give them the most careful attention and see that all their requirements are met (and this is essential), such a one will run a good chance of raising an average of three to five pairs of marketable squabs per pair of breeders per annum in the northern states. He will, however, raise three to four pairs very much oftener than five.

Presuming that the flock consists of Homers, the squabs produced should be mostly eight pounds to the dozen, says Howard Butcher, in Farm Journal. There might be a few weighing nine pounds to the dozen, and an occasional one a little heavier; but there will also be a few weighing as low as six to seven pounds to the dozen, and once in a while a cull. Anybody in the last 12 months who obtained an average of three dollars per dozen for squabs from such a flock, got about the highest wholesale market price. It must be borne in mind that while squabs command fancy prices in winter, that season is the time when comparatively few are produced; the greatest production is in the summer when the prices are the lowest. There is an opportunity sometimes to sell young birds for breeding purposes and thus get a better price for them than by killing for squabs, but, as a rule, squab farmers have to depend upon sending the birds to market.

AVOID NOSTRUMS.

Unwise to Go Doping Your Chickens for Ailments.

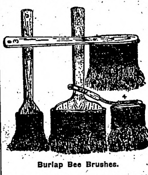
A nostrum is, commonly speaking, a quack medicine. Poultry raisers as well as others have to face the problems of using or not using such things. A great many medicines are put up for the use of poultry raisers, and the manufacturers advocate them for well birds and for sick ones. Usually they are worthless and sometimes they are positively dangerous.

One correspondent writes the Farmers' Review that he fed his fowls a patent worm remedy, to keep them in condition. All the fowls that received the remedy, with one exception, died from its effects. Healthy hens do not need medicine any more than do healthy people. To keep them in good condition it is only necessary to give them good food, pure water, pure air, sanitary surroundings and opportunities for exercise.

BEE-BRUSHES OF BURLAP.

Better Than the Brush Made of Bristles Because Softer.

The inclosed drawing illustrates my bee-brush which I have used several years, which is the cheapest, simplest and best brush that I ever used. It is made of burlap, writes a correspondent of Gleanings in Bee Culture. The one I send you is a narrow one, the one I made first. I now use a wider one. You can make them the whole width of the frame if you wish.



Burlap Bee Brushes.

We believe that these brushes would be very satisfactory, especially as the burlap would not be as irritating to the bees as the stiff brustles in an ordinary brush.

Uses Water Glass.

Most of my stock is sold for breeding or exhibition purposes and my eggs sold for hatching. Such cull stock and market eggs as I sell make up so small a part of my business that I have never made the effort to sell to private customers, writes a correspondent of the Farmer's Review. The eggs furnished to me by my flock outside of the hatching season I preserve in water glass, and sell to our grocers here when the price suits me.

Humanity in shipping live poultry is just as necessary and profitable as in shipping cattle or horses.

ONE KENTUCKY FEUD

BY BEN T. GLENWOOD

Everything seemed to be going wrong with Burson all of a sudden. For several years he had prospered and saved money and been happy and contented. In fact, ever since he came down from the hills and went to work energetically, courageously, persistently, he had been on the winning side of the game. Often, as he lay under the big tree in the dooryard, smoking his pipe in peace and content, he thought of the hard, precarious life in the hills, where there was little legitimate work to do and little—very, very little money for any and all purposes. And he thought, with a real pity, of the many stalwart young men idling away their time, getting food by hunting or fishing, taking desperate chances, perhaps, in the stills to get just money enough to clothe themselves.

Many of them were as willing to work as he, and would brave any danger to possess the modest little account Burson had in the savings bank. But hereditary environment is hard to break, and it takes a brave man to abandon the hill country, with its wild, free life and go down into the unknown plains, where all is flat and monotonous, and where people live in houses instead of cabins, and wear "biled shirts" of a Sunday.

Burson, however, possessing an unusually adventurous nature, had boldly broken away from the traditions of his fathers and invaded this unknown country. And, as has been stated, he had prospered and been contented and happy in his new life.

But while the current of his life flowed on in all serenity, the clouds were gathering and the Fates were preparing to shock him.

The first manifestation of forthcoming trouble was when Burson fell in love with Widow Griggs, who kept the boarding house where Burson lived when he was not on a job which involved his living with the farmer for whom he worked. It took Burson a long time to find out that he loved the widow. At first, he simply experienced deep content to go home and watch Mrs. Griggs' cheery, smiling face as she bustled about her household duties, and to note her grace of form and motion. Then he began to experience strange flutterings within his breast when his eyes met hers, or when she spoke to him, or when her ankle peeped out from beneath her dress as she trotted around the corner of the table.

All of these manifestations disturbed Burson inwardly and he began to take counsel with himself as to what it all meant, for he was something of a philosopher, was Burson, and when his inner consciousness became perturbed he wanted to know, right away, what it was all about. After much deliberation, involving the consuming of scandalous quantities of tobacco, and many sleepless nights, Burson finally discovered that it was love, and that the fair widow was the cause of his perturbation.

Then came the greatest struggle of all Burson's life. Should he give up his liberty and attempt to assume new and strange responsibilities? This self-analysis was soon swept away, however, before the rising tide of his passion, and the sole burning question became "Will she have me?"

With true manly instinct he put it to the test, not so gracefully, perhaps, as a Beau Brummel, but with the directness and force of the hill man.

With equal directness—tempered, however, by kindness engendered from the honest love-light she saw in his clear eyes, she told him his suit was impossible; that she was married and her husband still lived; that conditions she did not care to go into had separated them, and that her husband had gone back to the hills, while she had remained there with the little boy—but that he was about to return, when her happiness would be complete.

Then the sunshine faded from Burson's life and the future looked like the Arizona desert. Without trying to hide his hurt, he turned and walked away with dry eyes but tearful heart. And as the little woman watched him go so dejectedly away the tears sprang to her eyes and dimmed their brightness.

This was the first blow, but it was only the beginning.

Burson, stumbling along, not knowing whither his vagrant steps carried him, and caring less, found himself, after a time, before the village post office, and mechanically he entered and asked for his mail.

There was but one letter—an ominous-looking affair, in a brown envelope. Anyway it was something to divert his thoughts from the great calamity which had befallen him. Going outside, he seated himself on the rail provided for the hitching of horses and opened his letter.

It was from an old friend in the hill country, and was written in all brevity and simplicity. Burson's brother, Jack, had been killed by Pete Simpson. There had been a quarrel over a litter of pups and strong words had passed—the kind of words for which men in the hill country do not stand. Both men had pulled their revolvers—and Jack had been killed. Simpson had been tried and acquitted on the plea of self-defense.

It was a long job, spelling out this litter, for Burson had enjoyed few educational privileges, and when it was finished his head sank in his hands and the tears trickled through his fingers, for he had been very close to Jack. Indeed, Jack had been the only person he really had loved—before the Widow Griggs. Jack, his elder by some years, had filled the place of the dead father and mother to him, and no sacrifice had been too great, Burson remembered, for the older brother to make for the younger.

And now he was dead—shot down like a dog. Ah! well, there was but one thing to do—and as Burson sprang to his feet and reached for his revolver to examine its efficiency there seemed to be a grim satisfaction in the thought that it didn't matter much now, anyway, what happened to him. The light and hope of his life in the person of Mrs. Griggs having faded away, perhaps it might be for the best that this mission of vengeance had come to him. Not that he would have shrunk from his duty to his brother, even if his fondest dreams were about to be realized, for to the hill man the fundamental law is "an eye for an eye and a tooth for a tooth;" also a life for a life.

He strode rapidly toward Mrs. Griggs' boarding house, intent on gathering together a few essentials preparatory to his journey to the hills.

As he approached he saw Mrs. Griggs leaving the house, accompanied by a tall, athletic man, while in front of them the little boy ran laughing and shouting.

Being in no mood for conventionalities Burson stepped into the shadow of the trees, and the party passed without seeing him.

As they passed Burson looked full in the face of the man with Mrs. Griggs. Great heaven! It was Pete Simpson. He scarcely could believe his eyes. He followed them swiftly, still skulking in the shadows, until he had convinced himself it was no hallucination. No, sure enough, it was Pete Simpson. His vengeance had been brought to his very feet.

At first he thought to shoot him then and there. Then he thought of the shock it would give to Mrs. Griggs and the little boy, and decided to await their return. Pete evidently was boarding at the Griggs home, and he would get him later. He fondled his Colt's lovingly and returned to the Griggs place, where he lurked in the shadow of the big tree and waited—patiently, grimly, murderously.

After awhile they returned, and Mrs. Griggs tripped lightly into the house, a look of happiness on her face Burson could not remember ever to have seen before. The man started to follow, but the little boy clung to him and begged him to stay out until supper was ready.

He took the little fellow by the hand and walked down the broad walk. The picture of Jack dead on the ground swam before Burson's eyes and he leveled his revolver at Simpson. Oh! the fierce joy that surged through his veins. Jack would rest easier in his grave up in the hills after this night's work.

Then the voice of the little boy startled him.

"Papa, papa," he said, "why did you stay away so long?"

"I had to, Tony," the man replied, taking the boy in his arms. "But I am never going away any more."

"Why is your name Simpson and mamma's name Griggs?" persisted the boy.

"You cannot understand it yet, lad," replied the man. "She has been calling herself by the name she used to have before she married me. Some day you will understand."

Burson in the shadow was stupefied. What did it all mean? Then the door opened and Mrs. Griggs stood on the porch.

"Pete!" she called, "Come in while I cook supper. I am jealous to have you out of my sight after all these lonely months."

It all flashed across Burson in a moment. Pete Simpson, his brother's murderer, was the husband of the woman he loved.

Burson thought faster in the moment that followed than he had thought in all his life. Then he threw his revolver as far into the weeds as he could and walked rapidly toward the depot.

And so ended one Kentucky feud.

Burmese Court at Funerals.

"Among the Karens of Burma there is a close relation between the burial and the wedding ceremonies, and a death is made the occasion of a wholesale courting," said this paper. "The body is placed on a bamboo platform outside the hut and all the young men and girls gather there, singing and laughing. The men seat themselves on one side of the body and the girls on the other, and there, as if made happy by the presence of death, they carry on their courtships—and the men select their wives. The Kirghiz-Kazaks are strong in their remembrance of the dead—and here may be food for religious thought for Bible students in their customs. After death the body is hastily buried, arrayed in white clothes, and every day for 40 days after the death the mourners visit the tomb. The 40-day period apparently is counted for no especial reason as yet discovered.

Teh Old Reform Days.

At the ratification meeting in Crookston, the evening Congressman Steenerson left for Washington a vote of thanks was given him for getting an extension of time on this reservation and passing a drainage bill. Of course a large number of the settlers up here voted for Boen for congress, but they are not to blame for that as they are voting for reform. We were in the reform business in politicts at one time and played the game to the limit. We started out in the reform business in 1890, but did not reform much that year although we helped to elect one man to the legislature, that voted for every railroad measure and "wood chuck" that was brought before the legislature of 91. But in 1892 is the time we transacted business in the reform line and fixed the old corruptionist to a stand still. They told us that if we could only get Cleveland elected President, and Haldor E. Boen for Congressman we would not have to do another days work. Well we got them elected all right and found they had told us the truth, as no one could get a days work at any price, but that was not all we done in the reform business that year. We elected a man to the legislature who got up in the reform business so high that he swiped all the funds belonging to the farmers Elevator Company at McIntosh and bank rupted the company. He also voted for every railroad measure that came before the legislature

But that was not all the reform business we done that year. We elected a Judge of probate for Polk County that swiped all the money he could get a hold of belonging to the widows and orphans; and then blew his brains out; and then we elected a county treasurer, that let his deputy steal enough funds belonging to the county to make a trip to Europe; but of course that was all right as they all belonged to the reform party.

We ment business in the reform movement that year and tried our best to get Donnelly elected governor, so we could get a dollar a bushel for wheat, but we got beat by the plutocracy, who elected Nelson and only got 47 cents a bushel. Then we couldn't get ahold of any of the free silver that was to be issued by the government as soon as Boen was elected, so by January began to look over the labor situation, and found they were paying $1,10 cents a day for a limited number of men to do railroad work; and that the boss of the job could work the men from six o'clock in the morning untill 8 o'clock at night, if he wanted to, for if a man quit there was four or five ready to take his place and there was no kickeing among the men then; as there is now, as they were geting the differance between $1.10, paid then and $2 50, paid now in reform, and when they got hungry the could bite off as big a chunk of reform as they wanted as Boen and Cleveland was manufacturing it in large quatitys, at that time and dishing it up free.

Then we began to make some enquireys about work in the lumber camps, to the east of us,

A MENACE TO CITIES

Professor Fessenden Sounds a Note of Warning.

Cities Not Adapted to Operate Business Enterprises—Loss of Capital Through New Developments—The Danger a Real One.

It is becoming more and more generally recognized that undertakings founded on the great public needs of the highly organized society of modern times should be controlled by society. Whether, having the power, it is advisable that municipalities should actually engage in such undertakings or whether they should merely maintain their control, as it has been aptly put, through their powers as a landlord, is a matter which will be determined by the municipalities from political, social and economic as well as engineering considerations.

Considering the question from its engineering side alone, it is found that from the very essential nature of the matter only a certain class of engineering undertakings can be efficiently and properly operated by states or municipalities. It is very important that this limitation should be recognized, as where the limitation has been overstepped it has resulted in heavy financial losses to the governing bodies immediately concerned, it has seriously checked development in engineering lines, and these results have in consequence afforded a strong argument to those opposed to municipal operation of public utilities.

It is true that under state or municipal operation some minor and sporadic developments may be expected, but nothing of a general or important character. Important developments generally come only from the hands of individuals or bodies responsible only to themselves and provided with the incentive of a large profit. The elimination of self responsibility and incentive would inevitably produce a condition in industrial and scientific development analogous to the dark ages.

It is to be noted that this conclusion is derived from engineering considerations alone and does not include any consideration from the political, social or economic side. There may, it is conceivable, be political, social and economic considerations which tend to affect this limitation. Considered, however, from the engineering standpoint alone there can be no question but that the field of state and municipal operation should be limited to undertakings in which there is no immediate prospect of or need for improved method.

A danger which is always associated with the ownership of industrial undertakings is that the capital invested may be lost through the development of new and cheaper methods and processes. The extent to which industrial machinery of certain types is rendered obsolete by new improvements is not always realized. The writer is personally acquainted with one street car railroad plant in which the entire electrical equipment of the power house was thrown out and replaced with improved machinery four times within a period of ten years. The Carnegie company is reported, correctly it is believed, to have scrapped on one occasion more than $1,000,000 worth of new machinery which had never been used.

This has already become a serious matter for many municipalities which have engaged in undertakings lying outside of the engineering limits defined above. Many of these municipalities installed plants for the production of electric light at a time prior to the advent of important improvements in generating and distributing electricity, and as these municipalities in common with most municipalities made no proper allowance for depreciation the capital invested has been practically lost, and in addition the cost of electric light to the consumer is much higher than it is in other places equipped with later and more economical types of machinery. In addition, heavy and expensive repairs have been necessary and the taxes correspondingly increased. This has reacted upon the municipalities, since the heavy rates have caused manufacturers to move away to other towns, and this again has still further increased the burden upon those remaining. There are already indications that a considerable number of these municipalities which have engaged in improper undertakings are entering upon a period of financial difficulty.—R. A. Fessenden.

As a Socialist Sees It.

Every recognized authority on Socialist economics, from Marx to Ferri, has been and is an avowed economic evolutionist. They all without exception recognize that public ownership under capitalism must come before the full Socialist programme can meet with realization.

When the Socialist party shall succeed to power in municipality, state or nation it will fall heir to the holdings of its capitalist predecessors. Every dollar's worth of property that we can wrest from private capitalism through public ownership will fall into the hands of the Socialist party without a struggle upon its succession to power.—International Socialist Review.

What Government Is For.

It is the appropriate function of the government to safeguard the individual and to see that the game of business is fairly played, that the cards are held above the table and that everybody is given a square deal. It is not the appropriate function of the government to sit in the game.—Hon. Leslie M. Shaw.

A Gift of Solomon's.

In the ancient cathedral of Genoa a vase of immense value has been preserved for 600 years. It is cut from a single emerald. Its principal diameter is twelve and one-half inches and its height five and three-fourths inches. It is kept under several locks, the keys of which are in different hands, and it is rarely exhibited in public, then only by an order of the senate. When exhibited it is suspended round the neck of a priest by a cord, and no one is allowed to touch it but him. It is claimed that this vase is one of the gifts which were made to Solomon by the queen of Sheba.

A Limited Vocabulary.

If a person's knowledge of English were confined to one word, which would be the most useful? This subject was once discussed in the presence of Queen Caroline, her majesty entering into the question vigorously, according to the Dundee Advertiser. The greater number of the company fixed on "yes." One lady decided on "no," for, she argued, "though yes never means no, no very often means yes." How many men will indorse this? After all, one word would be as a drop in the ocean of our English language. A young woman who had learned a few Irish words without understanding them lost herself in the mountains. Meeting a handsome young peasant, she tried her Irish on him. Pat looked astonished, then pleased, and, rubbing his sleeve across his mouth, said: "Arrah! Do ye mane it, miss?" The girl, in her ignorance, had asked him for a kiss.

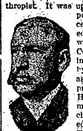
John H. Converse.



One of the directors of the Real Estate Trust Company of Philadelphia, whose president killed himself and which went into the hands of a receiver soon afterward, was John H. Converse, the millionaire and philanthropist. It was upon Mr. Converse's petition that the receiver for the wrecked trust company was appointed. Mr. Converse is prominent in the Presbyterian church, as the dead bank president, Frank K. Hipple, also was, and many funds of this church were deposited in the bank. Mr. Converse is president of the Baldwin Locomotive works and is director in several leading financial institutions of Philadelphia, but devotes much of his time to religious and philanthropic work. He has given away over half a million dollars, it is said, to various good causes. He was born in Burlington, Vt., in 1840 and graduated in 1861 from the University of Vermont.

Will Try Division.

'Fosston have dug up that old dead county division cat, and are geting up a petition to set off Nelson county from Folk, at the next general election. Under the present law only one proposition to divide can be up at the same election, which makes it a very easy matte for Crookston to vote down the proposition at the election. However, if the east end of the county would go into the fight united, and settle the county seat afterwards, they would stand a fair chance to win out, but if one part of the eastern end of the county puts up a campaig in Crookston for division, and the other part of the eastern end of the county go to Crookston and the western part of the county, and request them to vote the proposition down they would undoubtly comply with the reduest to vote No, as it is not for their interest to have any division of the county whatever.

The last weekes Plummer Pioneer contained an articel in regard to the two Bridges to be built across the Clearwater River during the winter. These bridges have long been demanded by the residents of this township and Mayneld township and we must say that we highly appreaciate the efforts made by the citizins of Red Lake Falls in getting the appropiations, from the County for these two bridges. Of course the ammount appropriated will not be sufficent to compleat the two bridges, but it means that they will be built, and that means a goo deal to the traveling public, and especially to the residents of Deer Park and Mayfield.

There was one thing conected with these appropiations, that was rather unlooked for by us, and that was the protes made by the honerable Chairman, of the board of County Commissioner, (Shaw). from Thief River Falls. We fail to see what reason he had for objecting to this demand made by some of the best tax payers in the County. It is a privilege that any set of citizins have a right to demand whether they are from Thief River Falls or anoter part of this county, and the grand stand play" made by this gentelman [illegible] and will be well aired by many a thinking voter.

Mr. Shaws protest, at this stage of the game, is apt to prove anything but benificial to the interests of Thief River Falls. It plainly shows what they would do if the had the chance, and that there is a "Nigger in the fence" somewhare between their interest and ours, which does not look hopeful to us for the future.

Archduke Karl Franz Josef.

Archduke Karl Franz Josef, heir to the Austrian throne, will need a long head and a firm hand when the time comes for him to take up the golden scepter. That the young man—he is now only nineteen—may some day rule Austria is due to a combination of unusual circumstances. The Crown Prince Franz Ferdinand, by his marriage to a woman not of royal birth, was obliged to renounce the claim of his future children to the purple. His younger brother, Otto, a dissolute fellow, found it necessary to renounce his rights in favor of his son, Karl Franz Josef, because of pressure brought to bear by his uncle, Emperor Francis Joseph, and the attitude of the Austrian people. That seems to give Franz Josef a pretty clear field, but it would complicate things if Franz Ferdinand's wife died and the crown prince should take a wife of royal blood.

Lope de Vega.

Lope de Vega, the famous Spanish dramatist and poet, lived from 1562 to 1635. His literary work began when he was about thirteen years old, and from that time until his death, a period of sixty years, he poured forth an enormous quantity of plays, dramatic compositions of all kinds, poems of every character, breathing every spirit from the strictest asceticism to the most unbridled license. Over 1,800 plays are credited to him, and the published collection, comprising about 300, is contained in twenty-eight volumes.

The French.

The French were first mentioned as the Franks, a tribe of warlike Germans in the northwestern part of the region now known as Prussia. They came into notice about 240 A. D., and with other German tribes invaded the Roman empire in the fifth century and settled in the country now known as France. The word Frank, or Frankman, means freeman. After their conquest of Gaul they named the country Frankenric, or Frank's kingdom.

Pet Boars.

The nicest pet the French forest affords is the marcassin, or baby wild boar. It is almost human in its cleverness, delights in funny pranks, has an evident sense of humor, makes friends of children and dogs and even lends itself to mimic hunts, playing the part of the hunted animal. Its antics are varied and original. The only creature to which the marcassin objects is its distant relative, the pig. Directly it sees that animal its back is up and its growing tusk is bared. In babyhood it has a lovely sleek coat of very dark brown and tan. When the silky hair is shed and bristles take its place the temper grows uneven. If marital and paternal cares come on, the wild boar puts away its childish ways and wants to take its family to the forest to feed there on acorns and beech mast. Woe to the hound or to the keeper who wants to keep him back. In the forest this paterfamilias may be called the first line of defense, the sow the second, and the little ones gambol round her.—Paris Cor. London Truth.

There was a reason for this exceptional action. General Pershing rendered services in the Moro country to which great value has been attached by his superiors. He is not only very brave, but is a diplomat as well. He was born in Missouri forty years ago and graduated from West Point.

THE PRESIDENT'S ANNUAL MESSAGE TO LAWMAKERS

Recommends Legislation on New and Important Subjects.

INCOME - INHERITANCE TAX

He Believes Such Laws Would Curb Growth of Fortunes to Dangerous Proportions.

His Views on Negro Question—Asks for Currency Reform, and Shipping Bill—Would Make Citizens of Japs—Many Other Important Subjects Discussed.

Washington, Dec. 3.—President Roosevelt's message to the second session of the Fifty-ninth congress deals with a number of new and important subjects, chief of which is the government prosecution of the trusts, the abuse of injunctions in labor troubles, the negro question, the preaching of class hatred between capital and labor, additional legislation for the control of large corporations, a federal inheritance and income tax law and currency reform.

The message opens with a statement of what the last congress left unfinished, and of this he says:

"I again recommend a law prohibiting all corporations from contributing to the campaign expenses of any party. Such a bill has already past one house of congress. Let individuals contribute as they desire; but let us prohibit in effective fashion all corporations from making contributions for any political purpose, directly or indirectly.

"Another bill which has just past one house of the congress and which is urgently necessary should be enacted into law is that conferring upon the government the right of appeal in criminal cases on questions of law. This right exists in many of the states; it exists in the District of Columbia by act of the congress. It is of course not proposed that in any case a verdict for the defendant on the merits should be set aside. Recently in one district where the government had indicted certain persons for conspiracy in connection with rebates, the court sustained the defendant's demurrer; while in another jurisdiction an indictment for conspiracy to obtain rebates has been sustained by the court, convictions obtained under it, and two defendants sentenced to imprisonment. The two cases referred to may not be in real conflict with each other, but it is unfortunate that there should even be an apparent conflict. At present there is no way by which the government can cause such a conflict, when it occurs, to be solved by an appeal to a higher court; and the wheels of justice are blocked without any real decision of the question. I can not too strongly urge the passage of the bill in question. A failure to pass will result in seriously hampering the government in its effort to obtain justice, especially against wealthy individuals or corporations who do wrong; and may also prevent the government from obtaining justice for wageworkers who are not themselves able effectively to contest a case where the judgment of an inferior court has been against them. I have specifically in view a recent decision by a district judge leaving railway employees without remedy for violation of a certain so-called labor statute. It seems an absurdity to permit a single district judge, against what may be the judgment of the immense majority of his colleagues on the bench, to declare a law solemnly enacted by the congress to be "unconstitutional," and then to deny to the government the right to have the supreme court definitely decide the question."

Evasion by Technicalities.

"In connection with this matter, I would like to call attention to the very unsatisfactory state of our criminal law, resulting in large part from the hab't of setting aside the judgments of inferior courts on technicalities absolutely unconnected with the merits of the case, and where there is no attempt to show that there has been any failure of substantial justice. It would be well to enact a law providing something to the effect that:

"No judgment shall be set aside or new trial granted in any cause, civil or criminal, on the ground of misdirection of the jury or the improper admission or rejection of evidence, or for error as to any matter of pleading or procedure unless, in the opinion of the court to which the application is made, after an examination of the entire cause, it shall affirmatively appear that the error complained of has resulted in a miscarriage of justice"

Injunctions.

On the subject of the abolition of injunctions in labor disputes, he says:

"In my last message I suggested the enactment of a law in connection with the issuance of injunctions, attention having been sharply drawn to the matter by the demand that the right of applying injunctions in labor cases should be wholly abolished. It is at least doubtful whether a law abolishing altogether the use of injunctions in such cases would stand the test of the courts; in which case of course the legislation would be ineffective. Moreover, I believe it would be wrong altogether to prohibit the use of injunctions. It is criminal to permit sympathy with criminals to weaken our hands in upholding the law; and if men seek to destroy life or property by mob violence there should be no impairment of the power of the courts to deal with them in the most summary and effective way possible. But so far as possible the abuse of the power should be provided against by some such law as I advocated last year.

"In this matter of injunctions there is lodged in the hands of the judiciary a necessary power which is nevertheless subject to the possibility of grave abuse. It is a power that should be exercised with extreme care and should be subject to the jealous scrutiny of all men, and condemnation should be meted out as much to the judge who fails to use it boldly when necessary as to the judge who uses it wantonly or oppressively. Of course, a judge strong enough to be fit for his office will enjoin any resort to violence or intimidation, especially by conspiracy, no matter what his opinion may be of the rights of the original quarrel. There must be no hesitation in dealing with disorder. But there must likewise be no such abuse of the injunctive power as is implied in forbidding laboring men to strive for their own betterment in peaceful and lawful ways; nor must the injunction be used merely to aid some big corporation in carrying out schemes for its own aggrandizement. It must be remembered that a preliminary injunction in a labor case, if granted without adequate proof (even when authority can be found to support the conclusions of law on which it is founded), may often settle the dispute between the parties; and therefore if improperly granted may do irreparable wrong. Yet there are many judges who assume a matter-of-fact course granting of a preliminary injunction to be the ordinary and proper judicial disposition of such cases; and there have undoubtedly been flagrant wrongs committed by judges in connection with labor disputes even within the last few years, altho I think much less often than in former years. Such judges by their unwise action immensely strengthen the hands of those who are striving entirely to do away with the power of injunction; and therefore such careless use of the injunctive process tends to threaten its very existence, for if the American people ever become convinced that this process is habitually abused, whether in matters affecting labor or in matters affecting corporations, it will be well-nigh impossible to prevent its abolition."

The Negro Problem.

The negro problem is given considerable attention, after calling attention to the fact that no section of the country is free from faults, and that no section has occasion to jeer at the shortcomings of any other section, he turns to the subject of lynchings, and especially as applied to the negro of the south. He says the greatest existing cause for mob law is the perpetration by the blacks of the crime of rape, a crime which he terms even worse than murder. He quotes the admonitions to the white people spoken by Gov. Candler, of Georgia, some years ago, and by Gov. Jelks, of Alabama, recently, and then says:

"Every colored man should realize that the worst enemy of his race is the negro criminal, and above all the negro criminal who commits the dreadful crime of rape; and it should be felt as in the highest degree an offense against the whole country, and against the colored race in particular, for a colored man to fail to help the officers of the law in hunting down with all possible earnestness and zeal every such infamous offender. Moreover, in my judgment, the crime of rape should always be punished with death, as is the case with murder; assault with intent to commit rape should be made a capital crime, at least in the discretion of the court; and provision should be made by which the punishment may follow immediately upon the heels of the offense; while the trial should be so conducted that the victim need not be wantonly shamed while giving testimony, and that the least possible publicity shall be given to the details.

"The members of the white race on the other hand should understand that every lynching represents by just so much a loosening of the bands of civilization; that the spirit of lynching inevitably throws into prominence in the community all the foul and evil creatures who dwell therein. No man can take part in the torture of a human being without having his own moral nature permanently lowered. Every lynching means just so much moral deterioration in all the children who have any knowledge of it, and therefore just so much additional trouble for the next generation of Americans.

"Let justice be both sure and swift; but let it be justice under the law, and not the wild and crooked savagery of a mob.

Need for Negro Education.

"There is another matter which has a direct bearing upon this matter of lynching and of the brutal crime which sometimes calls it forth and at other times merely furnishes the excuse for its existence. It is out of the question for our people as a whole permanently to rise by treading down any of their own number. Even those who themselves for the moment profit by such maltreatment of their fellows will in the long run also suffer. No more shortsighted policy can be imagined than, in the fancied interest of one class, to prevent the education of another class. The free public school, the chance for each boy or girl to get a good elementary education, lies at the foundation of our whole political situation. In every community the poorest citizens, those who need the schools most, would be deprived of them if they only received school facilities proportionately to the taxes they paid. This is as true of one portion of our country as of another. It is as true for the negro as for the white man. The white man, if he is wise, will decline to allow the negroes in a mass to grow to manhood and womanhood without education. Unquestionably education such as is obtained in our public schools does not do everything towards making a man a good citizen; but it does much. The lowest and most brutal criminals, those for instance who commit the crime of rape, are in the great majority men who have had either no education or very litle; just as they are almost invariably men who own no property; for the man who puts money by out of his earnings, like the man who acquires education, is usually lifted above mere brutal criminality. Of course the best type of education for the colored man, taken as a whole, is such education as is conferred in schools like Hampton and Tuskegee; where the boys and girls, the young men and young women, are trained industrially as well as in the ordinary public school branches. The graduates of these schools turn out well in the great majority of cases, and hardly any of them become criminals, while what little criminality there is never takes the form of that brutal violence which invites lynch law. Every graduate of these schools—and for the matter of that every other colored man or woman—who leads a life so useful and honorable as to win the good will and respect of those whites whose neighbor he or she is, thereby helps the whole colored race as it can be helped in no other way; for next to the negro himself, the man who can do most to help the negro is his white neighbor who lives near him; and our steady effort should be to better the relations between the two. Great tho the benefit of these schools has been to their colored pupils and to the colored people, it may well be questioned whether the benefit has not been at least as great to the white people among whom these colored pupils live after they graduate."

Capital and Labor.

On the subject of capital and labor the president takes the agitators of class hatred to task and says "to preach hatred to the rich man, as such, . . . to seek to mislead and inflame to madness honest men whose lives are hard and who have not the kind of mental training which will permit them to appreciate the danger in the doctrines preached is to commit a crime against the body politic and to be false to every worthy principle and tradition of American national life." Continuing on this subject he says:

"The plain people who think—the mechanics, farmers, merchants, workers with head or hand, the men to whom American traditions are dear, who love their country and try to act decently by their neighbors, owe it to themselves to remember that the most damaging blow that can be given popular government is to elect an unworthy and sinister agitator on a platform of violence and hypocrisy. Whenever such an issue is raised in this country nothing can be gained by flinching from it, for in such case democracy is itself on trial, popular self-government under republican forms is itself on trial. The triumph of the mob is just as evil a thing as the triumph of the plutocracy, and to have escaped one danger avails nothing whatever if we succumb to the other. In the end the honest man, whether rich or poor, who earns his own living and tries to deal justly by his fellows, has as much to fear from the insincere and unworthy demagog, promising much and performing nothing, or else performing nothing but evil, who would set on the mob to plunder the rich, as from the crafty corruptionist, who, for his own ends, would permit the common people to be exploited by the very wealthy. If we ever let this government fall into the hands of men of either of these two classes, we shall show ourselves false to America's past. Moreover, the demagog and corruptionist often work hand in hand. There are at this moment wealthy reactionaries of such obtuse morality that they regard the public servant who prosecutes them when they violate the law, or who seeks to make them bear their proper share of the public burdens, as being even more objectionable, than the violent agitator who hounds on the mob to plunder the rich. There is nothing to choose between such a reactionary and such an agitator; fundamentally they are alike in their selfish disregard of the rights of others; and it is natural that they should join in opposition to any movement of which the aim is fearlessly to do exact and even justice to all."

Railroad Employees' Hours.

He asks for the passing of the bill limiting the number of hours of employment of railroad employes, ar.l classes the measure as a very moderate one. He says the aim of all should be to steadily reduce the number of hours of labor, with as a goal the general introduction of an eight-hour day, but insists that on the Isthmus of Panama the conditions are so different from what they are here that the introduction of an eight-hour day on the canal would be absurd; and continues, "just about as absurd as it is, so far as the isthmus is concerned, where white labor cannot be employed, to bother as to whether the work is done by alien black men or alien yellow men."

Investigation of Disputes.

He urges the enactment of a drastic child labor law for the District of Columbia and the territories, and a federal investigation of the subject of child and female labor throughout the country. He reviews the work of the commission appointed to investigate labor conditions in the coal fields of Pennsylvania in 1902, and refers to the wish of the commission "that the state and federal governments should provide the machinery for what may be called the compulsory investigation of controversies between employers and employes when they arise." After referring to the fact that a bill has already been introduced to this end he says:

"Many of these strikes and lockouts would not have occurred had the parties to the dispute been required to appear before an unprejudiced body representing the nation and, face to face, state the reasons for their contention. In most instances the dispute would doubtless be found to be due to a misunderstanding by each of the other's rights, aggravated by an unwillingness of either party to accept as true the statements of the other as to the justice or injustice of the matters in dispute. The exercise of a judicial spirit by a disinterested body representing the federal government, such as would be provided by a commission on conciliation and arbitration would tend to create an atmosphere of friendliness and conciliation between contending parties; and the giving each side an equal opportunity to present fully its case in the presence of the other would prevent many disputes from developing into serious strikes or lockouts, and in other cases, would enable the commission to persuade the opposing parties to come to terms.

"In this age of great corporate and labor combinations, neither employers nor employees should be left completely at the mercy of the stronger party to a dispute, regardless of the righteousness of their respective claims. The proposed measure would be in the line of securing recognition of the fact that in many strikes the public has itself an interest which cannot wisely be disregarded; an interest not merely of general convenience, for the question of a just and proper public policy must also be considered. In all legislation of this kind it is well to advance cautiously, testing each step by the actual results; the step proposed can surely be safely taken, for the decisions of the commission would not bind the parties in legal fashion, and yet would give a chance for public opinion to exert its full force for the right."

Control of Corporations.

A considerable portion of the message is devoted to the subject of federal control of corporations in what he refers to the passage at the last session of the rate, meat inspection and food laws, and says that all of these have already justified their enactment, but recommends the amendment of the meat inspection law so as to put dates on the labels of meat products, and also to place the cost of inspection on the packers rather than on the government. Continuing on this subject of the control of corporations by the federal government he says:

"It cannot too often be repeated that experience has conclusively shown the impossibility of securing by the actions of nearly half a hundred different state legislatures anything but ineffective chaos in the way of dealing with the great corporations which do not operate exclusively within the limits of any one state. In some method, whether by a national license law or in other fashion, we must exercise, and that at an early date, a far more complete control than at present over these great corporations—a control that will among other things prevent the evils of excessive overcapitalization, and that will compel the disclosures by each big corporation of its stockholders and of its properties and business, whether owned directly or thru subsidiary or affiliated corporations. This will tend to put a stop to the securing of inordinate profits by favored individuals at the expense whether of the general public, the stockholders, or the wageworkers. Our effort should be not so much to prevent consolidation as such, but so to supervise and control it as to see that it results in no harm to the people. The reactionary or ultraconservative apologists for the misuse of wealth assail the effort to secure such control as a step toward socialism. As a matter of fact it is these reactionaries and ultraconservatives who are themselves most potent in increasing socialistic feeling. One of the most efficient methods of averting the consequences of a dangerous agitation, which is 80 per cent. wrong, is to remedy the 20 per cent. of evil as to which the agitation is well founded. The best way to avert the very undesirable move for the governmental ownership of railways is to secure by the government on behalf of the people as a whole such adequate control and regulation of the great interstate common carriers as will do away with the evils which give rise to the agitation against them. So the proper antidote to the dangerous and wicked agitation against the men of wealth as such is to secure by proper legislation and executive action the abolition of the grave abuses which actually do obtain in connection with the business use of wealth under our present system—or rather no system—of failure to exercise any adequate control at all. Some persons speak as if the exercise of such governmental control would do away with the freedom of individual initiative and dwarf individual effort. This is not a fact. It would be a veritable calamity to fail to put a premium upon individual initiative, individual capacity and effort; upon the energy, character and foresight which it is so important to encourage in the individual. But as a matter of fact the deadening and degrading effect of pure socialism, and especially of its extreme form communism, and the destruction of individual character which they would bring about, are in part achieved by the wholly unregulated competition which results in a single individual or corporation rising at the expense of all others until his or its rise effectually checks all competition and reduces former competitors to a position of utter inferiority and subordination.

"In enacting and enforcing such legislation as this congress already has to its credit, we are working on a coherent plan, with the steady endeavor to secure the needed reform by the joint action of the moderate men, the plain men who do not wish anything hysterical or dangerous, but who do intend to deal in resolute commonsense fashion with the real and great evils of the present system. The reactionaries and the violent extremists show symptoms of joining hands against us. Both assert, for instance, that if logical, we should go to government ownership of railroads and the like; the reactionaries, because on such an issue they think the people would stand with them, while the extremists care rather to preach discontent and agitation than to achieve solid results. As a matter of fact, our position is as remote from that of the bourbon reactionary as from that of the impracticable or sinister visionary. We hold that the government should not conduct the business of the nation, but that it should exercise such supervision as will insure its being conducted in the interest of the nation. Our aim is, so far as may be, to secure, for all decent, hardworking men, equality of opportunity and equality of burden.

Combinations Are Necessary.

"The actual working of our laws has shown that the effort to prohibit all combination, good or bad, is noxious where it is not ineffective. Combination of capital like combination of labor is a necessary element of our present industrial system. It is not possible completely to prevent it; and if it were possible, such complete prevention would do damage to the body politic. What we need is not vainly to prevent all combination, but to secure such rigorous and adequate control and supervision of the combinations as to prevent their injuring the public, or existing in such form as inevitably to threaten injury—for the mere fact that a combination has secured practically complete control of a necessary of life would under any circumstances show that such combination was to be presumed to be adverse to the public interest. It is unfortunate that our present laws should forbid all combinations, instead of sharply discriminating between those combinations which do evil. Rebates, for instance, are as often due to the pressure of big shippers (as was shown in the investigation of the Standard Oil company and as has been shown since by the investigation of the tobacco and sugar trusts) as to the initiative of big railroads. Often railroads would like to combine for the purpose of preventing a big shipper from maintaining improper advantages at the expense of small shippers and of the general public. Such a combination, instead of being forbidden by law, should be favored. In other words, it should be permitted to railroads to make agreements, provided these agreements were sanctioned by the interstate commerce commission and were published. With these two conditions complied with it is impossible to see what harm such a combination could do to the public at large. It is a public evil to have on the statute books a law incapable of full enforcement because both judges and juries realize that its full enforcement would destroy the business of the country; for the result is to make decent railroad men violators of the law against their will, and to put a premium on the behavior of the wilful wrongdoers. Such a result in turn tends to throw the decent man and the wilful wrongdoer into close association, and in the end to drag down the former to the latter's level; for the man who becomes a lawbreaker in one way unhappily tends to lose all respect for law and to be willing to break it in many ways. No more scathing condemnation could be visited upon a law than is contained in the words of the interstate commerce commission when, in commenting upon the fact that the numerous joint traffic associations do technically violate the law, they say: "The decision of the United States supreme court in the Transmississippi case and the Joint Traffic association case has produced no practical effect upon the railway operations of the country. Such associations, in fact, exist now as they did before these decisions, and with the same general effect. In justice to all parties, we ought probably to add that it is difficult to see how our interstate railways could be operated with due regard to the interest of the shipper and the railway without concerted action of the kind afforded thru these associations."

This means that the law as construed by the supreme court is such that the business of the country cannot be conducted without breaking it. I recommend that you give careful and early consideration to this subject, and if you find the opinion of the interstate commerce commission justified, that you amend the law so as to obviate the evil disclosed.

Inheritance and Income Tax.

It was expected that the president would refer in some way to his belief in the necessity for the curbing of enormous fortunes, and he has done so by recommending legislation for both income and an inheritance tax. He believes the government should impose a graduated inheritance tax, and, if possible, a graduated income tax. He says:

"I am well aware that such a subject as this needs long and careful study in order that the people may become familiar with what is proposed to be done, may clearly see the necessity of proceeding with wisdom and self-restraint, and may make up their minds just how far they are willing to go in the matter; while only trained legislators can work out the project in necessary detail. But I feel that in the near future our national legislators should enact a law providing for a graduated inheritance tax by which a steadily increasing rate of duty should be put upon all moneys or other valuables coming by gift, bequest, or devise to any individual or corporation. It may be well to make the tax heavy in proportion as the individual benefited is remote of kin. In any event, in my judgment the pro rata of the tax should increase very heavily with the increase of the amount left to any one individual after a certain point has been reached. It is most desirable to encourage thrift and ambition, and a potent source of thrift and ambition is the desire on the part of the breadwinner to leave his children well off. This object can be attained by making the tax very small on moderate amounts of property left; because the prime object should be to put a constantly increasing burden on the inheritance of those swollen fortunes which it is certainly of no benefit to this country to perpetuate.

There can be no question of the ethical propriety of the government thus determining the conditions upon which any gift or inheritance should be received. Exactly how far the inheritance tax would, as an incident, have the effect of limiting the transmission by devise or gift of the enormous fortunes in question it is not necessary at present to discuss. It is wise that progress in this direction should be gradual. At first a permanent national inheritance tax, while it might be more substantial than any such tax has hitherto been, need not approximate, either in amount or in the extent of the increase by graduation, to what such a tax should ultimately be.

Inheritance Tax Constitutional.

"This species of tax has again and again been imposed, altho only temporarily, by the national government. It was first imposed by the act of July 6, 1797, when the makers of the Constitution were alive and at the head of affairs. It was a graduated tax; tho small in amount, the rate was increased with the amount left to any individual, exceptions being made in the case of certain close kin. A similar tax was again imposed by the act of July 1, 1862; a minimum sum of $1,000 in personal property being excepted from taxation, the tax then becoming progressive according to the remoteness of kin. The war-revenue act of June 13, 1898, provided for an inheritance tax on any sum exceeding the value of $10,000, the rate of tax increasing both in accordance with the amounts left and in accordance with the legatee's remoteness of kin. The supreme court has held that the succession tax imposed at the time of the civil war was not a direct tax but an impose of excise which was both constitutional and valid. More recently the court, in an opinion delivered by Mr. Justice White, which contained an exceedingly able and elaborate discussion of the powers of the congress to impose death duties, sustained the constitutionality of the inheritance tax feature of the war-revenue act of 1898.

Is Income Tax Constitutional?

"In its incidents, and apart from the main purpose of raising revenue, an income tax stands on an entirely different footing from an inheritance tax, because it involves no question of the perpetuation of fortunes swollen to an unhealthy size. The question is in its essence a question of the proper adjustment of burdens to benefits. As the law now stands it is undoubtedly difficult to devise a national income tax which shall be constitutional. But whether it is absolutely impossible is another question; and if possible it is most certainly desirable. The first purely income tax law was past by the congress in 1861, but the most important law dealing with the subject was that of 1894. This the court held to be unconstitutional.

"The question is undoubtedly very intricate, delicate, and troublesome. The decision of the court was only reached by one majority. It is the law of the land, and, of course, is excepted as such and loyally obeyed by all good citizens. Nevertheless, the hesitation evidently felt by the court as a whole in coming to a conclusion, when considered together with the previous decisions on the subject, may perhaps indicate the possibility of devising a constitutional income-tax law which shall substantially acccomplish the results aimed at. The difficulty of amending the constitution is so great that only real necessity can justify a resort thereto. Every effort should be made in dealing with this subject, as with the subject of the proper control by the national government over the use of corporate wealth in interstate business, to devise legislation which without such action shall attain the desired end; but if this fails, there will ultimately be no alternative to a constitutional amendment."

He makes a strong plea for technical and industrial education for the masses, and while the federal government can do but little in this line, he asks that schools of this character be established in the District of Columbia as an example to the various states.

Agricultural Interests.

He appeals for every encouragement that the congress can give to the agricultural interests of the country. He points to the good that is being done by the various forms of grange organizations, and says:

"Several factors must cooperate in the improvement of the farmer's condition. He must have the chance to be educated in the widest possible sense—in the sense which keeps ever in view the intimate relationship between the theory of education and the facts of life. In all education we should widen our aims. It is a good thing to produce a certain number of trained scholars and students; but the education superintended by the state must seek rather to produce a hundred good citizens than merely one scholar, and it must be turned now and then from the class book to the study of the great book of nature itself. This is especially true of the farmer, as has been pointed out again and again by all observers most competent to pass practical judgment on the problems of our country life. All students now realize that education must seek to train the executive powers of young people and to confer more real significance upon the phrase "dignity of labor," and to prepare the pupils so that in addition to each developing in the highest degree his individual capacity for work, they may together help create a right public opinion, and show in many ways social and cooperative spirit. Organization has become necessary in the business world; and it has accomplished much for good in the world of labor. It is no less necessary for farmers. Such a movement as the grange movement is good in itself and is capable of a well-nigh infinite further extension for good so long as it is kept to its own legitimate business. The benefits to be derived by the association of farmers for mutual advantage are partly economic and partly sociological.

"Moreover, while in the long run voluntary effort will prove more efficacious than government assistance, while the farmers must primarily do most for themselves, yet the government can also do much. The department of agriculture has broken new ground in many directions, and year by year it finds how it can improve its methods and develop fresh usefulness. Its constant effort is to give the governmental assistance in the most effective way; that is, thru associations of farmers rather than to or thru individual farmers. It is also striving to coordinate its work with the agricultural departments of the several states, and so far as its own work is educational, to coordinate it with the work of other educational authorities. Agricultural education is necessarily based upon general education, but our agricultural educational institutions are wisely specializing themselves, making their course relate to the actual teaching of the agricultural and kindred sciences to young country people or young city people who wish to live in the country.

"Great progress has already been made among farmers by the creation of farmers' institutes, of dairy associations, of breeders' associations, horticultural associations, and the like. A striking example of how the government and the farmers can cooperate is shown in connection with the menace offered to the cotton growers of the southern states by the advance of the boll weevil. The department is doing all it can to organize the farmers in the threatened districts, just as it has been doing all it can to organize them in aid of its work to eradicate the cattle fever tick in the south. The department can and will cooperate with all such associations, and it must have their help if its own work is to be done in the most efficient style."

He urges the extension of the irrigation and forest preservation system, and asks for an appropriation for building a memorial theater at Arlington.

Marriage and Divorce.

As a means of bringing about national regulation of marriage and divorce he suggests a constitutional amendment, and says it is not safe to leave these questions to be dealt with by the various states. Continuing on this subject he says:

When home ties are loosened; when men and women cease to regard a worthy family life, with all its duties fully performed, and all its responsibilities lived up to, as the life best worth living; then evil days for the commonwealth are at hand. There are regions in our land, and classes of our population, where the birth rate has sunk below the death rate. Surely it should need no demonstration to show that wilful sterility is, from the standpoint of the nation, from the standpoint of the human race, the one sin for which the penalty is national death, race death; a sin for which there is no atonement; a sin which is the more dreadful exactly in proportion as the men and women guilty thereof are in other respects, in character, and bodily and mental powers, those whom for the sake of the state it would be well to see the fathers and mothers of many healthy children, well brought up in homes made happy by their presence. No man, no woman, can shirk the primary duties of life, whether for love of ease and pleasure, or for any other cause, and retain his or her self-respect.

The president asks for the enactment into law of a shipping bill that will place American interests on the seas on a par with those of other countries, and urges especially that something be done that will establish direct steamship communication with South American ports.

Currency Reform.

Amendments to the present currency laws are asked for, and after showing that present laws are inadequate because of the wide fluctuation of interest charges, he says:

"The mere statement of these facts shows that our present system is seriously defective. There is need of a change. Unfortunately, however, many of the proposed changes must be ruled from consideration because they are complicated, are not easy of comprehension, and tend to disturb existing rights and interests. We must also rule out any plan which would materially impair the value of the United States two per cent. bonds now pledged to secure circulation, the issue of which was made under conditions peculiarly creditable to the treasury. I do not press any special plan. Various plans have recently been proposed by expert committees of bankers. Among the plans which are possibly feasible and which certainly should receive your consideration is that repeatedly brought to your attention by the present secretary of the treasury, the essential features of which have been approved by many prominent bankers and business men. According to this plan national banks should be permitted to issue a specified proportion of their capital in notes of a given kind, the issue to be taxed at so high a rate as to drive the notes back when not wanted in legitimate trade. This plan would not permit the issue of currency to give banks additional profits, but to meet the emergency presented by times of stringency.

Need of Automatic System.

"I do not say that this is the right system. I only advance it to emphasize my belief that there is need for the adoption of some system which shall be automatic and open to all sound banks, so as to avoid all possibility of discrimination and favoritism. Such a plan would tend to prevent the spasms of high money and speculation which now obtain in the New York market; for at present there is too much currency at certain seasons of the year, and its accumulation at New York tempts bankers to lend it at low rates for speculative purposes; whereas at other times when the crops are bing moved there is urgent need for a large but temporary increase in the currency supply. It must never be forgotten that this question concerns business men generally quite as much as bankers; especially is this true of stockmen, farmers and business men in the west; for at present at certain seasons of the year the difference in interest rates between the east and the west is from six to ten per cent., whereas in Canada the corresponding difference is but two per cent. Any plan must, of course, guard the interests of western and southern bankers as carefully as it guards the interests of New York or Chicago bankers; and must be drawn from the standpoints of the farmer and the merchant no less than from the standpoints of the city banker and the country banker.

The law should be amended so as to specifically to provide that the funds derived from customs duties may be treated by the secretary of the treasury as he treats funds obtained under the internal revenue laws. There should be a considerable increase in bills of small denominations. Permission should be given banks, if necessary under settled restrictions, to retire their circulation to a larger amount than $3,000,000 a month."

He again asks for free trade with this country for the Philippines and in the same connection reviews the work done by this country in the islands, and says "if we have erred in the Philippines it has been in proceeding too rapidly in the direction of granting a large measure of self-government."

American citizenship should be conferred on the citizens of Porto Rico. The harbor of San Juan in Porto Rico should be dredged and improved. The expenses of the federal court of Porto Rico should be met from the federal treasury. The administration of the affairs of Porto Rico, together with those of the Philippines, Hawaii and our other insular possessions, should all be directed under one executive department; by preference the department of state or the department of war.

Naturalization of Japs.

President Roosevelt scores San Francisco and other Pacific coast cities for their treatment of the Japanese, and makes the following recommendations:

Our nation fronts on the Pacific, just as it fronts on the Atlantic. We hope to play a constantly growing part in the great ocean of the orient. We wish, as we ought to wish, for a great commercial development in our dealings with Asia; and it is out of the question that we should permanently have such development unless we freely and gladly extend to other nations the same measure of justice and good treatment which we expect to receive in return. It is only a very small body of our citizens that act badly. Where the federal government has power it will deal summarily with any such. Where the several states have power I earnestly ask that they also deal wisely and promptly with such conduct, or else this small body of wrongdoers may bring shame upon the great mass of their innocent and right-thinking fellows—that is, upon our nation as a whole. Good manners should be an international no less than an individual attribute. I ask fair treatment for the Japanese as I would ask fair treatment for Germans or Englishmen, Frenchmen, Russians or Italians. I ask it as due to humanity and civilization. I ask it as due to ourselves because we must act uprightly toward all men.

"I recommend to the congress that an act be passed specifically provding for the naturalization of Japanese who come here intending to become American citizens. One of the great embarrassments attending the performance of our international obligations is the fact that the statutes of the United States government are entirely inadequate. They fail to give to the national government sufficiently ample power, through United States courts and by the use of the army and navy, to protect aliens in the rights secured to them under solemn treaties which are the law of the land. I therefore earnestly recommend that the criminal and civil statutes of the United States be so amended and added to as to enable the president, acting for the United States government, which is responsible in our international relations, to enforce the rights of aliens under treaties. Even as the law now is something can be done by the federal government toward this end, and in the matter now before me affecting the Japanese, everything that it is in my power to do will be done, and all of the forces, military and civil, of the United States which I may lawfully employ will be so employed. There should, however, be no particle of doubt as to the power of the national government completely to perform and enforce its own obligations to other nations. The mob of a single city may at any time perform acts of lawless violence against some class of foreigners which would plunge us into war. The city by itself would be powerless to make defense against the foreign power thus assaulted, and if independent of this government it would never venture to perform or permit the performance of the acts complained of. The entire power and the whole duty to protect the offending city or the offending community lies in the hands of the United States government. It is unthinkable that we should continue a policy under which a given locality may be allowed to commit a crime against a friendly nation, and the United States government limited, not to preventing the commission of the crime, but, in the last resort, to defending the people who have committed it against the consequences of their own wrongdoing."

Cuban Intervention.

The rebellion in Cuba and the incidents leading up to the establishment of the provisional government is reviewed, and the president says:

"When the election has been held and the new government inaugurated in peaceful and orderly fashion of the provisional government will come to an end. I take this opportunity of expressing upon behalf of the American people, with all possible solemnity, our most earnest hope that the people of Cuba will realize the imperative need of preserving justice and keeping order in the island. The United States wishes nothing of Cuba except that it shall prosper morally and materially, and wishes nothing of the Cubans save that they shall be able to preserve order among themselves and therefore to preserve their independence. If the elections become a farce, and if the insurrectionary habit becomes confirmed in the island, it is absolutely out of the question that the island should continue independent; and the United States, which has assumed the sponsorship before the civilized world for Cuba's career as a nation, would again have to intervene and to see that the government was managed in such orderly fashion as to secure the safety of life and property. The path to be trodden by those who exercise self-government is always hard, and we should have every charity and patience with the Cubans as they tread this difficult parth. I have the utmost sympathy with, and regard for, them; but I most earnestly adjure them solemnly to weigh their responsibilities and to see that when their new government is started it shall run smoothly, and with freedom from flagrant denial of right on the one hand, and from insurrectionary disturbances on the other."

Considerable space is devoted to the international conference of American republics and the visit of Secretary Root to South America, and points to the fact that our efforts in behalf of the nations of that country are appreciated by them.

On the subject of the Panama canal he promises a special message in the near future.

The Army and Navy.

The message closes with a plea for the maintenance of the navy at its present standard, to do which he says would mean the building of one battleship each year. Of the present efficiency of the army and navy he says:

"The readiness and efficiency of both the army and navy in dealing with the recent sudden crisis in Cuba illustrates afresh their value to the nation. This readiness and efficiency would have been very much less had it not been for the existence of the general staff in the army and the general board in the navy; both are essential to the proper development and use of our military forces afloat and ashore. The troops that were sent to Cuba were handled flawlessly. It was the swiftest mobilization and dispatch of troops over sea ever accomplished by our government. The expedition landed completely equipped and ready for immediate service, several of its organizations hardly remaining in Havana over night before splitting up into detachments and going to their several posts. It was a fine demonstration of the valor and efficiency of the general staff. Similarly, it was owing in large part to the general board that the navy was able at the outset to meet the Cuban crisis with such instant efficiency; ship after ship appearing on the shortest notice at any threatened point, while the marine corps in particular performed indispensable service. The army and navy war colleges are of incalculable value to the two services, and they cooperate with constantly increasing efficiency and importance.

"The congress has most wisely provided for a national board for the promotion of rifle practise. Excellent results have already come from this law, but it does not go far enough. Our regular army is so small that in any great war we should have to trust mainly to volunteers; and in such event these volunteers should already know how to shoot; for if a soldier has the fighting edge, and ability to take care of himself in the open, his efficiency on the line of battle is almost directly proportionate to excellence in marksmanship. We should establish shooting galleries in all the large public and military schools, should maintain national target ranges in different parts of the country, and should in every way encourage the formation of rifle clubs thruout all parts of the land. The little republic of Switzerland offers us an excellent example in all matters connected with building up an efficient citizen soldiery.

"THEODORE ROOSEVELT."

THE FARMER IN WESTERN CANADA.

The Quality of No. 1 Hard Wheat Cannot Be Beaten.

The Canadian West in the past five or ten years has given a set back to the theory that large cities are the backbone of a country and a nation's best asset. Here we have a country where no city exceeds 100,000, and where only one comes within easy distance of that figure according to the census just taken and where no other city reaches a population exceeding 15,000. The places with a population over 5,000 can be counted upon the fingers of one hand, and yet the prosperity that prevails is something unprecedented in the history of all countries past or present.

The reason for this marvelous prosperity is not hard to seek. The large majority of the 810,000 people who inhabit Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta, have gone on to the farm, and have betaken themselves to the task of not only feeding and clothing themselves, but of raising food for others less happily circumstanced.

The crop of 1906, although not abnormal, is an eye-opener to many who previously had given little thought to the subject. Ninety million bushels of wheat at 70 cents per bushel—$63,000,000; 76,000,000 bushels of oats at 30 cents per bushel—$22,800,000; 17,000,000 bushels of barley at 40 cents per bushel—$6,800,000; makes a total of $92,600,000. This is altogether outside the root products; dairy produce, and the returns from the cattle trade; the beet sugar industry and the various other by-products of mixed farming.

When such returns are obtainable from the soil it is not to be wondered at that many are leaving the congested districts of the eayst, to take upon themselves the life of the prairie farm and the labor of the housbandman.

With the construction of additional railroads new avenues, for agricultural enterprise are opening up, and improved opportunities are offered to the settler who understands prairie farming, and is willing to do his part in building up the new country.

This is the theme that Mr. J. J. Hill, the veteran railroad builder in the West, has laid before the people in a series of addresses which he has given at various points during the past few months, and, having been for so long identified with the development of the West, there are few men better qualified than he to express an opinion upon it. Take care of the country, says he, and the cities will take care of themselves.

The farmers of the Western States and the Canadian West, are more prosperous than ever before, and when it comes to measuring up results, the Canadian appears to have somewhat the better of it. His land is cheaper in fact, the government continues to give free homesteads to settlers, and the returns per acre are heavier when the crop is harvested. Farming land in the Western States runs from $60 to $150 an acre and up, whereas equally good soil may be purchased in Canada for $8 to $15 per acre, within easy reach of a shipping point, and much of this is available for free homesteading. The quality of the Canadian No. 1 hard wheat cannot be beaten, and the returns to the acre are several bushels better than on this side of the line; the soil and climate of that country being peculiarly adapted to wheat growing.

The fact is evidently appreciated by the large number of American farmers who have in the past two or three years settled in the Canadian West. The agents of the Canadian Government, whose address will be found elsewhere, advise us that for the fiscal year 1904-5, the records show that 43,543 Americans settled in Canada, and in 1905-6 the number reached 57,796. From all of which, it appears that at present, there is a good thing in farming in Western Canada, and that the American farmer is not slow to avail himself of it.

HIS TROUBLE WAS INTERNAL.

Indian Chief Had Peculiar Ideas About Hydrophobia.

Mayor Stoy of Atlantic City was describing the cosmopolitan throngs that visit his famous and gay resort.

"Every nationality comes here," he said. "Greeks, Turks, Hindoos, Chinese, Moors—they all come.

"I was talking the other day to one of the physicians of the Pasteur Institute—the hospital, you know, for the prevention and cure of hydrophobia. The Pasteur Institute reminded me of Atlantic City, its visitors seemed to be of such a diversified character.

"The physician told me about an Indian chief who had come to him for treatment last year.

"'My name,' said the chief, 'is War Eagle. Please take me in hand. I fear I am getting hydrophobia.'

"'Have you been bitten,' the physician asked, 'by a mad dog?'

"'Not exactly bitten,' War Eagle answered, 'but I have the gravest suspicions about a black poodle that was served to me in a ragout last Friday afternoon.'"

Uses of Masks.

"Among the North American Indians the origin of the use of masks lay," says a writer, "in the desire to conceal the emotions. Thus should two warriors meet in combat, the mask conceals any expression, whether of sympathy, fear or other emotion. For instance, the knowledge that fear was depicted on one's face and that his antagonist knew it would very possibly insure the defeat of the one whose feelings were betrayed to the other."

Almost any one can be a power for evil—but it takes a man among men to be a power for good.

TEN YEARS OF PAIN.

Unable to Do Even Housework Because of Kidney Troubles.

Mrs. Margaret Emmerich, of Clinton street, Napoleon, O., says: "For fifteen years I was a great sufferer from kidney troubles. My back pained me terribly. Every turn or move caused sharp shooting pains. My eyesight was poor, dark spots appeared before me, and I had dizzy spells. For ten years I could not do housework, and for two years did not get out of the house. The kidney secretions were irregular, and doctors were not helping me. Doan's Kidney Pills brought me quick relief, and finally cured me. They saved my life."

Origin of Term "Grocer."

According to etymology, a "retail grocer" is as absolute an impossibility as a "weekly journal." A grocer, or "grosser" as it used to be spelled, is really a trader "in gross"—that is to say, in large quantities, wholesale. Englishmen of other days spoke of "grossers of fish" and "grossers of wine," and an act of Edward III. expressly mentions that "grossers" dealt in all manner of goods. In those days "spicer" was the word for "grocer" in the modern sense. But it happened that the Grocers' company, founded in the fourteenth century, specialized in spicery and so "grocer" gradually took the place of "spicer."

Keep in Good Health.

There are many thousands of people all over the world who can attribute their good health to taking one of two Brandreth's Pills every night. These pills cleanse the stomach and bowels, stimulate the kidneys and liver and purify the blood. They are the same fine laxative tonic pills your grandparents used, and being purely vegetable they are adapted to children and old people, as well as those in the vigor of manhood and womanhood.

Brandreth's Pills have been in use for over a century and are for sale everywhere, plain or sugar-coated.

Sounded Praises of Soap.

In a guide to etiquette published early in the last century the writer says that "soap does not irritate the complexion; some of the finest complexions we have known have been regularly washed with soap every day." The same authority remarks that "the daily bath is now the rule rather than the exception, and common sense has triumphed over the decision that washing was injurious." And then the writer has a dig at her great-grandmother, "whose only ablutions consisted in wetting her cheeks with a cambric handkerchief dipped in rose-water." "In all our directions with regard to the bath," adds this early Victorian dictator, "it must be borne in mind that we only refer to those in sound state of health."

Japan's Empress Popular.

It is doubtful if any royal consort is more loved by her people than is the empress of Japan. Educated according to feudal ideas and skilled in all the accomplishments befitting one of her social eminence, her majesty strongly favors the broadness of the new education for women and from her private purse gives large sums toward the maintenance of women's schools and universities. During the war with Russia the empress visited the hospitals many times and every day passed hours making bandages. The effect of these bandages upon the wounded soldiers has been of deep interest to medical and scientific men, for the soldiers honored by them seemed to rally under a peculiar mental influence. All other bandages were destroyed after their first use; those made by the empress were sterilized and used again for the simple reason of their effect on the recovery of the soldiers.

NEW YEAR'S CALLS.

A New Drink to Replace the Old-Time "Apple-Jack."

Twenty-five years ago the custom of making New Year's calls was a delightful one for all concerned, until some of the boys got more "egg-nog" or "apple-jack" than they could successfully carry.

Then the ladies tried to be charitable and the gentlemen tried to be as chivalrous as ever and stand up at the same time.

If anyone thinks there has not been considerable improvement made in the last quarter of a century in the use of alcoholic beverages, let him stop to consider, among other things, the fact that the old custom of New Year's calls and the genteel tippling is nearly obsolete.

The custom of calling on one's friends, however, at the beginning of the new year, is a good habit, and another good habit to start at that time is the use of well-made Postum instead of coffee or spirits.

A Staten Island doctor has a sensible daughter who has set Postum before her guests as a good thing to drink at Yule Tide, and a good way to begin the New Year. Her father writes:

"My daughter and I have used Postum for some time past, and we feel sure it contains wholesome food material.

"I shall not only recommend it to my patients, but my daughter will be most pleased to give a demonstration of Postum to our Christmas and New Year's callers." Read "The Road to Wellville" in pkgs. "There's a reason."

Autos in German Army.

The German Volunteer Army Corps is provided with 37 automobiles in charge of uniformed drivers, which carry staff officers to and fro. In the maneuvers last month the speed and convenience of the machines were highly praised by the tacticians who watched the developments of the mimic campaign.

High Position for Admiral.

Rear Admiral Willard H. Brownson, who has just taken command of the American naval forces in the East, will, it is understood, soon be recalled to take what has become to be regarded as the most important post in the navy—namely, chief of the bureau of navigation. Admiral Brownson would, in the usual course, be placed on the retired list next year on account of old age, but owing to his excellent physical and mental condition it is understood he will continue at the head of the navigation bureau at least during the present administration.

BOY'S HEAD ONE SOLID SORE.

Hair All Came Out—Under Doctor Three Months and No Better—Cuticura Works Wonders.

Mr. A. C. Barnett, proprietor of a general store in Avard, Oklahoma, tells in the following grateful letter how Cuticura cured his son of a terrible eczema. "My little boy had eczema. His head was one solid sore, all over his scalp; his hair all came out, and he suffered very much. I had a physician treat him, but at the end of three months he was no better. I remembered that the Cuticura Remedies had cured me, and after giving him two bottles of Cuticura Resolvent, according to directions, and using Cuticura Soap and Ointment on him daily, his eczema left him, his hair grew again, and he has never had any eczema since. We use the Cuticura Soap and Ointment, and they keep our skin soft and healthy. I cheerfully recommend the Cuticura Remedies for all cases of eczema. A. C. Barnett, Mar. 30, 1905."

PHOTOGRAPHY AND FINE ART.

Camera Pictures Much More Than Mechanical Reproduction.

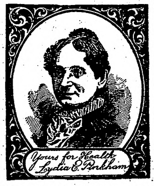
Few persons could be found who would deny the claims of photography to rank among the fine arts, when skillully used and properly controlled, since the photography of of to-day is something more than a mechanical reproduction. The individuality of the photographer is being expressed in his work almost as much as is that of the painter. The painter still has the advantage, for while he may give us an impression fuller than that made by nature upon the eye, the photographer can deal only with that which is observed with such unerring fidelity and skill by a mechanical eye. Composition is therefore one of the necessary principles to the photographer, who thus supplies the mechanical eye with a mind, yet he must study lighting at different hours of the day and varying weather conditions that he may know the best effects to be obtained. Many otherwise successful photographers need to realize that scientific accuracy is not necessarily artistic truth, so that, while one actualizes, the definite sharpness may be softened and the effect enhanced.—Home Magazine.

WHO SHE WAS

SKETCH OF THE LIFE OF LYDIA E. PINKHAM

And a True Story of How the Vegetable Compound Had Its Birth and How the "Panic of '73" Caused it to be Offered for Public Sale in Drug Stores.

This remarkable woman, whose maiden name was Estes, was born in Lynn, Mass., February 9th, 1819, coming from a good old Quaker family. For some years she taught school, and became known as a woman of an alert and investigating mind, an earnest seeker after knowledge, and above all, possessed of a wonderfully sympathetic nature.



Yours for Health
Lydia E. Pinkham

In 1843 she married Isaac Pinkham, a builder and real estate operator, and their early married life was marked by prosperity and happiness. They had four children, three sons and a daughter.

In those good old fashioned days it was common for mothers to make their own home medicines from roots and herbs, nature's own remedies—calling in a physician only in specially urgent cases. By tradition and experience many of them gained a wonderful knowledge of the curative properties of the various roots and herbs.

Mrs. Pinkham took a great interest in the study of roots and herbs, their characteristics and power over disease. She maintained that just as nature so bountifully provides in the harvest-fields and orchards vegetable foods of all kinds; so, if we but take the pains to find them, in the roots and herbs of the field there are remedies expressly designed to cure the various ills and weaknesses of the body, and it was her pleasure to search these out, and prepare simple and effective medicines for her own family and friends.

Chief of these was a rare combination of the choicest medicinal roots and herbs found best adapted for the cure of the ills and weaknesses peculiar to the female sex, and Lydia E. Pinkham's friends and neighbors learned that her compound relieved and cured and it became quite popular among them.

All this so far was done freely, without money and without price, as a labor of love.

But in 1873 the financial crisis struck Lynn. Its length and severity were too much for the large real estate interests of the Pinkham family, as this class of business suffered most from fearful depression, so when the Centennial year dawned it found their property swept away. Some other source of income had to be found.

At this point Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound was made known to the world.

The three sons and the daughter, with their mother, combined forces to restore the family fortune. They argued that the medicine which was so good for their woman friends and neighbors was equally good for the women of the whole world.

The Pinkhams had no money, and little credit. Their first laboratory was the kitchen, where roots and herbs were steeped on the stove, gradually filling a gross of bottles. Then came the question of selling it, for always before they had given it away freely. They hired a job printer to run off some pamphlets setting forth the merits of the medicine, now called Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and these were distributed by the Pinkham sons in Boston, New York, and Brooklyn.

The wonderful curative properties of the medicine were, to a great extent, self-advertising, for whoever used it recommended it to others, and the demand gradually increased.

In 1877, by combined efforts the family had saved enough money to commence newspaper advertising and from that time the growth and success of the enterprise were assured, until today Lydia E. Pinkham and her Vegetable Compound have become household words everywhere, and many tons of roots and herbs are used annually in its manufacture.

Lydia E. Pinkham herself did not live to see the great success of this work. She passed to her reward years ago, but not till she had provided means for continuing her work as effectively as she could have done it herself.

During her long and eventful experience she was ever methodical in her work and she was always careful to preserve a record of every case that came to her attention. The case of every sick woman who applied to her for advice—and there were thousands—received careful study, and the details, including symptoms, treatment and results were recorded for future reference, and to-day these records, together with hundreds of thousands made since, are available to sick women the world over, and represent a vast collaboration of information regarding the treatment of woman's ills, which for authenticity and accuracy can hardly be equaled in any library in the world.

With Lydia E. Pinkham worked her daughter-in-law, the present Mrs. Pinkham. She was carefully instructed in all her hard-won knowledge, and for years she assisted her in her vast correspondence.

To her hands naturally fell the direction of the work when its originator passed away. For nearly twenty-five years she has continued it, and nothing in the work shows when the first Lydia E. Pinkham dropped her pen, and the present Mrs. Pinkham, now the mother of a large family, took it up. With women assistants, some as capable as herself, the present Mrs. Pinkham continues this great work, and probably from the office of no other person have so many women been advised how to regain health. Sick women, this advice is "Yours for Health" freely given if you only write to ask for it.

Such is the history of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound; made from simple roots and herbs; the one great medicine for women's ailments, and the fitting monument to the noble woman whose name it bears.

THE INVENTIONS OF HAWKINS

THE CROOK TRAP.

Hawkins and his wife had been just one month in their new house.

My memory on that point is particularly clear, for the Executive Committee of the Ladies' Missionary Society met at Hawkins' home the very day they moved in officially; and it had been hanging over me, more or less, that the next assembly of that body was to be held at my own residence.

Not that I am in any way unsympathetic as to church work and benighted savages and such matters; but when half a dozen women get together and discuss a few heathen and a great many hats and similar things, the solitary man in the house is apt to feel—

At any rate, when I saw Mrs. Hawkins enter my door that evening, the first of the Executive Committee to arrive, I experienced a sinking sensation for the moment. Then I secured my hat, mumbled a few excuses, and disappeared, to see how Hawkins was spending the evening.

The inventor himself answered my ring.

"Ah, Griggs," he remarked. "Committee talk you out of the house?"

"Something of the sort," I admitted.

"Glad you came in. There's something I want to—but hang up your hat."

"Hawkins," I said, closing the door, "why do you pay a large overfed English gentleman to stand around the premises if it's necessary for you to answer the bell? I'm not much on style, you know, but—"

"William? Oh, it's his night out," laughed Hawkins. "I believe the cook and the girls have gone, too, for that matter."

"Then we're altogether alone?"

"Yes," said the inventor, comfortably, pushing forward one of the big library chairs for my accommodation, "all alone in the house."

"And it's a mighty nice house," I mused, gazing into the next apartment, the dining-room. "That's a splendid room, Hawkins."

"Isn't it?" smiled Hawkins, drawing back the heavy curtains rather proudly. "Most of the little wrinkles are my own ideas, too."

"That sideboard?" I asked, indicating a frail-looking but artistic bit of furniture built into the wall.

"That, too—combination of sideboard and silver-safe."

"Safe!" I laughed. "You don't keep the silver in there?"

"Why not?"

"My dear man, anyone could pry that door off with a penknife."

"Admitted. But supposing your 'anyone' to be a burglar, he'd have to get to the door before he could pry it off, would he not, Griggs?"

"Burglars do not, as a rule, find great difficulty in entering the average house," I suggested.

"Aha! That's just it—the average house!" cried the inventor. "This isn't the average house, Griggs. The burglar who tries to get into this particular house is distinctly up against it!"

"Indeed?"

"Yes, sir! The crook that attempts a nocturnal entrance here has my sincere and heartfelt sympathy."

"Hawkins' Patent Automatic Burglar Alarm?" I suggested.

"What the deuce are you sneering at?" snapped the inventor. "No, there's no patent burglar alarm in this house."

"Hawkins' Steel Dynamite-Proof Shutters?"

Hawkins ignored the remark and busied himself lighting a cigar.

"Hawkins' Triple-Expansion Spring-Gun?" I hazarded once more.

"Oh, drop it! Drop it!" cried Hawkins. "Positively, Griggs, your efforts at humor disgust one. In some ways, you are as bad as a woman. Go back and sit with the Executive Committee."

"What's the connection?"

"Why, the thing I expected to show you in a few minutes is the very same one which my wife fought against for two weeks, before she let me put it into operation peacefully!" Hawkins burst out. "There's where the connection comes in between your degenerate little wits and those of the generality of women."

"If it was an invention, I don't blame your wife one little bit, Hawkins," I said. "I can see just how she must have felt about—"

"There's the evening paper, if you want to read," spat forth the inventor, poking the sheet across the library table.

Therewith he turned his back squarely upon me and settled down to a book.

Hawkins was sitting near the window—in fact, his chair brushed the hangings. As I sat gazing pensively at the back of his neck, a sudden breeze swayed the curtains above him.

There was an undue amount of swishing overhead, it seemed to me. Something near the top of the window, and concealed by the hangings, rattled distinctly; simultaneously a gong struck sharply somewhere upstairs.

Hawkins whirled about, a most remarkable expression on his lately sullen countenance. As nearly as I could analyze it, it was a mixture of joy, excitement and trembling expectancy.

"One!" he exclaimed.

The bell struck again.

"Two!" cried Hawkins. "By Jove! That's—"

Crash!

Out of the curtains something something dropped heavily on the inventor!

For an instant it held the appearance of a grain sack, but there was something distinctly solid about it, too, for it dealt Hawkins a resounding whack upon his cranium before it rolled to the floor.

"Phew!" he gasped, sinking back into his chair caressing the bump with an unsteady hand. "That—that did startle me, Griggs!"

"I shouldn't wonder," I smiled. "What on earth did you have concealed up there?"

"Aha! You'd never guess," remarked Hawkins, his ill-humor departed.

"No, I don't believe I should," I mused, staring at the pile of canvas on the floor. "Did the painters leave it?"

"They did not," replied Hawkins, coldly. "That, Griggs, is the Hawkins Crook-Trap!"

"Hawkins—Crook-Trap!" I repeated.

"That's what I said," pursued the gentleman. "Possibly—now—it may not be past your understanding to grasp why I feel so secure about that flimsy little silver-safe."

"I think I see. The burglar, presumably, comes in at the window, is knocked senseless by your trap, and next morning you find and capture him as you go down to breakfast?"

"Nothing of the sort. Look here." Hawkins picked up the affair.

As he grasped the end, the thing hung downward and showed itself to be a long canvas bag, fully large enough to contain the upper half of the average man. It was distended, too, by ribs, and appeared to be of considerable weight.

"There she is—just a bag, telescoped and hung on a frame above the window. The burglar steps in, the bag is released, drops over him, these circular steel ribs contract and clutch his arms like a vise—and there you are! How's that for an idea, Griggs?"

"Looks good," I assented.

"Moreover, the same spring which releases the ribs breaks a bottle of chloroform," continued the inventor, enthusiastically. "It runs into a hood, is pressed against the burglar's nose, and two minutes later the man is stark and stiff on the floor!

"Meanwhile the annunciator bell tells me what window has been opened. I ring up the police—and it's all over with the man who tries to break in."

"It sounds all right," I admitted. "Why didn't it do all that just now?"

"Just now? Oh—you mean—just now?" stammered the inventor. "Well, it did do practically all of that, didn't it? The window wasn't opened, anyway—it was the breeze that knocked down the thing. Furthermore, the ones on this floor aren't adjusted yet—I only got them from the fellow who made them to-day.

"But up-stairs they're all fixed—chloroform and all, ready for the burglar. I tell you, Griggs, when this crook-trap of mine is on every window in New York city, there's be a sensation in criminal circles!"

"Very likely. How much does it cost?"

"Well—er—well it cost me about—er—$100 a window, Griggs, but—"

"About 20 windows to the average house," I murmured. "Two thousand dollars for—"

"Well, it won't cost a tenth of that when I'm having the parts turned out in quantities," cried Hawkins, with considerable heat. "Why under the sun do you always try to throw a wet blanket over everything? Suppose it does cost $2,000 to equip a house with my crook-trap? If a man has $10,000 worth of silverware, he'll be willing enough to spend—"

I laughed. It wasn't meant for a nasty laugh at all—it was simply amusement at the inventor's emotionalism. But it riled Hawkins.

"Where the devil does the joke come in?" he thundered. "If I—"

"Hush!" I cried.

"I won't hush! I—"

"Two!" I counted. "Be quiet."

Hawkins calmed down on the instant.

"Was—was it the bell?" he whispered.

Ding! Ding! Ding! Ding!

The gong upstairs had chimed six times and stopped.

I stared at Hawkins, and Hawkins at me, and the inventor's countenance went white.

Far above, the evening calm was disturbed by a stamping and threshing noise, punctuated now and then by a muffled shout.

"There!" cried the inventor. There was a wealth of satisfaction in that one word.

"Well, somebody's caught," I said.

"You bet he is!" replied Hawkins, with a nervous chuckle. "Six bells—that's the top story back—one of the servants' rooms. Somebody must have thought the house deserted and come in from the roof."

Bang! Bang! Bang! The intruder wasn't submitting to the caresses of the crook-trap without a struggle. Also, from the volume and vigor of the racket, it was painfully clear that the intruder was a robust individual.

"Well?" said Hawkins, still staring at me with a rigid smile.

"Well?"

"Well, we've got to go up there and capture him," announced the inventor, gathering himself for the task. "Come on."

"Not just yet, thank you. We'll let the chloroform get in its work first."

"But don't you want to see the thing in actual operation?"

"Hawkins, if anyone could have less curiosity about anything than I have about seeing your crook-trap in operation—"

"All right, stay down here if you like. I'm going up!"

"Suppose your burglar gets loose?" I argued. "Suppose he has a big, wicked revolver, and learns that you're responsible for the way he's been handled?"

Hawkins walked resolutely and silently toward the stairs. As for me, curiosity as to his fate bested my judgment. I followed.

As we neared the top of the house, the thumping and hammering grew louder and more vicious; and when we finally stood outside the door, the din was actually deafening.

"That's—that's either William's room or the cook's," said Hawkins, with a slight quaver in his tones. "He's going it, isn't he?"

"He certainly is. Let's stay here, Hawkins."

"No, sir, I'm going in to watch it. He's not loose, that's sure."

Hawkins opened the door very gently.

Inside, the room was dark—not pitch dark, but that semi-gloom of a city room whose only light comes from an arc lamp half a block away.

The air was heavy and sickening with the fumes of chloroform. They fairly sent my head a-reeling, but their effect upon the burglar seemed to have been nil.

Over by the window a huge form was hurling itself to and fro, from wall to wall and back again, in the frantic endeavor to gain freedom. The bag enveloped his head and shoulders, but a mighty pair of arms within the bag were straining and tearing at the fabric, and a couple of long, muscular legs kicked madly at everything within reach.

One the whole, the scene was a bit too gruesome to be humorous. As a rule I can see the funny side of Hawkins' doings; but the fun departed from this particular mess at the thought of what would happen when the colossus finally emerged from the bag and commenced operations upon Hawkins and myself—neither of us athletes.

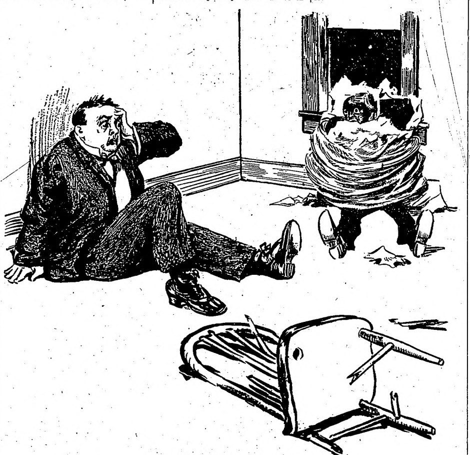
"He's caught, isn't he, Griggs?" stuttered Hawkins, clutching my arm.

"For the moment," I replied. "But come—let's get an officer. If that canvas gives—"

"Gives!" sneered the inventor. "Why that canvas—"

"Gawd! If I gets yer!" screamed the man in the bag.

"Oh, great Caesar!" gulped Hawkins. "It's—it's getting horrible, isn't it?"



"Mr.—'Awkins!" Gasped the Butler.

"Aha! I heard yer then, ye cur!" roared the captive.

Hawkins' hand on my arm shook violently.

"We—we'll have to do something with him," he whispered. "What shall it be? We've got to subdue him, somehow or other."

"Why not let the chloroform work while we go out and get a couple of policemen?"

"Well, you see, it doesn't seem to be working, Griggs. Don't know why, but—phew! Did you hear that rip?"

I had heard it. I had also seen the silhouette of a long arm appear against the dim light of the window.

"Oh, Lord!" gasped Hawkins. "It's given somewhere! We'll have to squelch him now inside of ten seconds or—what the deuce shall I do, Griggs?"

"Take a chair and stun him," I replied. And personally I don't care for the job."

"Well—somebody's got to do something," groaned the inventor, seizing one of the bedroom chairs. "If ever he gets loose—say, where are you going, Griggs?"

"Just into the hall," I said. "I'm going to light the gas and watch the battle from a safe distance."

Hawkins clutched his chair and stared at me like a man in a nightmare. His expression reminded me of the day when, as a boy on the farm, I took the hatchet and started out to kill my first chicken. I felt just as Hawkins looked that evening in the dark doorway of the bedroom.

"D'ye suppose it'll kill him?" he choked. "Griggs, do you think—"

A long rip resounded from the darknesss. A triumphant shout followed.

Hawkins turned swiftly, raised his chair, and darted toward the man in the bag.

There was a crash, a shout, a dull blow, and a heavy fall—and just then I managed to light the gas.

Literally, I caught my breath and rubbed my eyes. For a few seconds the scene dumfounded me past action; but shortly I hurried into the apartment and struck another light.

Hawkins was stretched upon the floor groaning. His entire face seemed to have suffered violent impact with some unyielding body, and both hands covered his nose, from which the life-blood flowed freely.

And across the room, sitting against the wall, his large person decorated by sundry steel hoops and shreds of canvas, sat—William, the Hawkins' butler, staring dazedly into space!

"Oh, Griggs, Griggs, Griggs!" moaned the inventor. "Come quick! Get my wife! I'm done for this time! He's finished me!"

"Hawkins!" I cried, shaking him. "Did he—"

"Never mind him—let him escape," replied Hawkins, faintly. "Just get my wife before I go. Good-by, old friend, good-by."

"Mr.—'Awkins!" gasped the butler, his senses returning.

"What!" shrilled the inventor, sitting bolt upright, black eyes, swelled face, and all completely forgotten. "Is that you, William?"

"Yes, sir," stammered the man. "Was—was it you I hit, sir?"

"Was it!" yelled Hawkins, struggling to his feet. "Look at this face! What the deuce did you mean by it?"

"Beg—beg pardon, sir, but did you—did you sorter strike me with a chair, sir?"

"I—well, yes, Willam, I did."

"Well, I, not knowing of course as it was you, sir, I sorter hit back. But have you got the thief, sir?"

"The what?"

"Indeed, yes, sir. There's one in the house. I was attacked here—right in this very room. See here, sir, this bag! Just as I opened the window, he kem behind me, sir, threw it over my head, and tried to chloroform me, sir—you can smell it, sir."

"Yes. All right," said Hawkins, briefly, with what must have seemed to the man a strange lack of interest.

"You see, sir, whoever the rascal was, he must 'a' known as I intended going out this evening, sir, and that the house would be empty like. So in he sneaks from the roof, bag and all, and waits. And when I kem up the stairs, instead of going out, sir—"

"All right. That'll do. I understand," muttered Hawkins. "No one threw a bag over you. It was a new—er—sort of burglar alarm—just had it put up to-day."

"Burglar alarm!" cried the butler, staring at the remnants from which he was slowly extricating himself.

"Yes!" snapped Hawkins. "And don't stand there mumbling over it, William!"

"Yes, sir."

"Here," said the inventor, "is a—er—twenty-dollar note. You will immediately forget everything that has happened within the last half hour."

"Yes, sir," responded the butler, with a wide smile.

Hawkins led the way down-stairs. In the bathroom he paused to lave his much abused features; and by the time he had finished, my own features had had a chance to regain something like composure.

Once more in the library, which we had deserted some 20 minutes before, Hawkins threw himself rather limply into a chair.

"Well, well, well!" he muttered. "Now, who under the sun could have foreseen that?"

I forebore remarks.

"William ought to be in the prize-ring," continued the inventor, sadly. "But he's a bright chap. He'll keep his mouth shut. Lucky—er—nobody else was in the house, wasn't it?"

"How are you going to account to Mrs. Hawkins for those black eyes?"

"Oh—we can say that we were boxing and you hit me. That's easy."

"She'll believe that, too, Hawkins," I said, gazing at the battered countenance. "You look more as if you'd had a collision with an express train."

"Oh, she'll believe it, all right," said the inventor, cheerily. "For once—just for once, Griggs—something has happened which my better half won't be on to. You'll see I'm right. There isn't a clew."

"Well, perhaps," I sighed.

"And now let's have some of that old Scotch. I feel a little weak."

We loitered into the next apartment—the dining-room. We turned our our footsteps toward the sideboard. We stopped—both of us—as if transformed to stone.

The door was off the silver-safe. The drawers lay about the floor. And the little safe itself was as empty as the day it left the cabinet-maker!

"D-d-d'you see it, too?" cried Hawkins in a scared, husky voice.

"Yes," I replied, stooping to look into the safe. "It must have been a sneak-thief, Hawkins. Every vestige of your beautiful service is gone!"

The inventor glared long at the wreck.

"And now that's got to be explained," he muttered at last, continuing his journey to the sideboard. "How can I get around it?"

He poured out a generous dose of the Scotch, imbibed it at a swallow, and shuffled drearily back to the library, where he dropped once more into a chair and stared through fast-swelling eyes at the glazed tile fireplace.

And I? Well, just then I heard Mrs. Hawkins' step on the vestibule flooring without; she had returned for the minutes of the last meeting.

The bell rang. I walked quickly upstairs to call up the police and notify them. It wasn't my place to answer that bell, with William in the house.

Sporting Gossip.

HANDLESS BILLIARD WONDER.

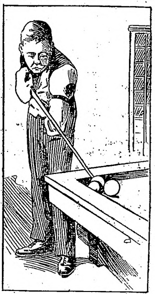
George Sutton Master of Many Men Not Handicapped as He Is.

The most interesting character identified with the game of billiards is George H. Sutton, the handless expert.

Considering his physical limitations his skill is more remarkable than that of any other billiard player, past or present.

Of all the thousands of persons who play the game in various parts of the world there are not more than eight, if there are that many, who are his equals.

He plays all the games in which the billiard cue is a factor, with amazing ability. His comprehension of all styles of billiards corresponds to that of Jake Schaefer, and his execution presents extremes of delicacy and force which the wizard cannot excel. In no sense a specialist, he executes all classes of shots from a simple carom to the masse, does exquisite work on the rail, playing from 100 to 500 or no count, and has made averages as high as 60 at eighteen-inch balk line; makes close draws and follows with rare neatness and precision; invariably attempts the right shot and directs every effort with a view of obtaining favorable position.



Sutton In Action.

Sutton is thirty-five years of age and a resident of Milwaukee. When but eight years of age he lost both hands by coming in contact with a circular saw.

A great deal of his playing is done by using the bridge, and the skill with which he removes the bridge and handles his cue is amazing. When the ball is close to the rail he rests the cue on the rail and guides it with the left arm and makes the stroke with the right.

In making the masse shot he reverses the system used by other players. Instead of having the stroke arm up above and the bridge down near the balls he makes a bridge over his shoulder and has the stroke arm down near the balls.

When asked for a few pointers on the fine points of the game and the means by which an amateur might accomplish the best results, Sutton stated the stroke is the first important feature, the second is the draw and follow and the third single cushion shots. These should be practiced constantly by the amateur, and in a short time he will get surprising results.

"I believe in an amateur receiving instructions from the professional, for the reason that he can acquire more skill in a dozen or more lessons than he could perhaps in several years of his own efforts. The judgment of force is one of the most essential features. This can only be acquired by a system of playing the draw and follow shots. I believe every man ought to play billiards. It is a mild form of physical exercise and a splendid mental exercise."

HUTCHINS GIVES UP FOOTBALL.

Badger Athletic Director to Cut Out Gridiron Work Next Year.

Dr. C. P. Hutchins, athletic director of the University of Wisconsin, has announced that he would not coach the Badger football team next season. His reason is that it is too much work for him to handle the football team in addition to his many duties as head of the athletic department.

Hutchins' first year at Wisconsin has been a successful one. He has turned out a good football team from a mediocre lot of material, and has surprised every one by the success of his team, which went through the season without a defeat.

Hutchins will remain in charge of the athletic department, but the Wisconsin authorities are now on a still hunt for a man who can coach the football team and qualify for that position under the new conference rules. There is some chance of Prof. McCarthy, the old Brown gridiron star, who has been acting as assistant coach, taking the place at the head of the football squad.

Agricultural Society.

The approaching close of the fiscal year of the Minnesota state fair brought together the board of managers in an important meeting at the Merchants hotel in St. Paul last Tuesday night. There was a general rounding up of the business of the year and a number of important subjects were brought before the board by interested parties.

President C. N. Cosgrove, of Le Sueur, presided over the meeting, which was attended by Vice Presidents B. F. Nelson and C. M. Griggs, J. M. Underwood, D. S. Hall, Wm. E. Lee, Col. W. M. Liggett, L. D. Baird, G. W. Patterson and Secretary E. W. Randall.

The first important matter to come to the board's attention was an application from the Red Wing Manufacturers' Association for the use of the Manufactures Building on the fair grounds during the fair of 1907, for a special Red Wing exhibit. The association had appointed C. S. Sultzer, E. S. Hoyt, W. E. Cless and W. H. Putnam a committee to present the matter before the state fair board, and the application was backed by individual applications for every foot of space in the building. The committee guaranteed good live exhibits. It is the idea that if Red Wing makes a good showing at the coming fair other cities in the state will follow her example and in the course of a few years a series of exhibits will have been held in the Manufactures Building which will be representative of the various manufacturing districts of the state. Definite action on the proposition was postponed until after the annual meeting in January.

Winn Powers, of St. Paul, came before the board in the interests of the I. O. O. F. sovereign grand lodge, which is to convene at St. Paul next September. It is desired to have the use of certain buildings and the grand stand for quarters for the uniformed corps of the Odd Fellows, and is was suggested that if the fair could be postponed until the week of the lodge gathering it would be for the interests of both. This, however, will hardly be possible as the fair date cannot be changed.

Mr. Wilcox reported $68,094.46 cash on hand at the present time. A canvass of the board showed that a majority of the members will attend the international livestock exhibition in Chicago next week. During the week the large breeders' associations will have meetings and the National Association of Fairs and Expositions, will meet and fix the dates of the fairs of 1907.

The program for the annual meeting was talked over and various details arranged. The principal address on Tuesday, the opening day, will be by Dr. H. M. Brown, of Hillsboro, Ohio, a distinguished breeder and agriculturist of that state.

More Money.

St. Paul—Minnesota's treasury is to be enriched by the payment by the government of over $67,000 for Indian war bonds issued by the state in the early '60s, and for which refundment had never been provided by the United States.

State Auditor Iverson received word from Washington yesterday that the claim which the state has been vigorously pushing for over a year had been allowed, and that Minnesota would be repaid the amount she had advanced for the quelling of the Indian outbreak of 1862.

Bonds to the value of $69,000 were issued by the state, after the government had guaranteed to make good any expense the state incurred in putting down the Indian wars. The bonds were sold in New York by Governor Ramsey, and the money used, but payment could never be secured from the government. The matter was pushed last year by Auditor Iverson and Attorney General Young, who took the matter up personally with officials in Washington.

The greatest aid was given by the Minnesota delegation in congress, and through their efforts, legislation was secured, legalizing the refundment. The matter has been finally approved by the treasury department, and the state will receive $67,792.23.

Important.

Duluth—One of the next most important moves that will be made in the iron ore business of Northern Minnesota will be the concentration of the ores. This will be the recognition of the low grade ores of this district, ore that is not sufficiently high in metallic iron to be of commercial value at this distance from the point of consumption. It is learned, and now is published for the first time, that prominent Pittsburg mining men have been here during the week looking over the mining district with a view to taking over low grade properties and concentrating the ore either at the mine or in Duluth.

News Notes.

Mankato—Minneopa park is now a reality. It entered the list of state parks when Attorney General E. T. Young, with the approval of Governor Johnson, closed the deal for the purchase of thirty acres in Blue Earth county surrounding the Minneopa falls, which are five miles south of Mankato.

There was a mysterious visitor in the city the early part of last week, who, it is said, is interested in the construction of such a road, but he refused to say anything for publication.

Duluth.—Rather than have drastic measures adopted by the city administration, which was being harassed by those in favor of a tight "lid" for Duluth saloons, the Retail Liquor Dealers' Association has issued instructions that all saloons must close at midnight, and remain closed on Sunday until noon.

PROOF OF BAILEY CHARGES

DOCUMENTS IN CASE AGAINST SENATOR MADE PUBLIC.

Attorney General of Texas Shows How Former Received Money from Big Oil Magnate.

Austin, Tex. — Attorney General Davidson issued a statement Friday night in which he gives the documentary proof of his charge that Senator Bailey had received money from the president of the Waters-Pierce Oil company.

The first voucher is dated at St. Louis, June 30, 1900, and is on the Waters-Pierce Oil company to H. Clay Pierce, debtor, for demand loan of $8,000 to Joseph W. Bailey, and is indorsed "account Texas cases."

Another is on Henry Stribbing, of Waco, Tex., for account of expense in trust civil case of the state of Texas versus Waters-Pierce Oil company at Waco, $1,500."

In connection with this voucher is the following:

"Lake Lebagamon, Wis., June 12.—To Andrew, St. Louis: If Johnson approves Bailey to loan Stribbing on his note fifteen hundred. Bailey should quiet all Texas parties. Tell him I will see him soon.

"H. C. PIERCE."

The following notation was written on the telegram:

"S.—Draft drawn by Bailey for $1,500."

Another voucher read:

"Waters-Pierce Oil company, to H. C. Pierce, Dr. Amount paid J. W. Bailey account Texas cases, $200."

Among other documents made public in the statement is a note signed by J. W. Bailey payable to the order of H. C. Pierce for $8,000 dated Washington, March 1, 1901, "for value received;" a letter signed by J. W. Bailey addressed to H. C. Pierce asking him to send New York exchange for $1,700, and another addressed to J. P. Gruet, secretary and signed by H. C. Pierce, president.

The letter follows:

"Please send New York exchange for $1,750 for Joseph W. Bailey, Gainesville, Tex., and charge against legal expense, account of Texas legislation.

"I sent this amount personally to Mr. Bailey in response to his inclosed letter of March 28. Since then Mr. Bailey has returned the amount to me, and it is now proper for the company to make this payment.

"Attach Mr. Bailey's letter to your voucher and merely inclose the draft to him without the voucher. His inclosed letter will be your voucher."

SHAW'S PLAN TO CHECK PANICS.

His Report Recommends a Restricted Credit Currency.

Washington. — In his report to congress, Leslie M. Shaw, secretary of the treasury, reiterates his recommendation of a restricted credit currency and suggests that if more power is granted the secretary panics can be prevented or their evil effects greatly reduced.

He points out the danger of the "central bank" plan, and urges his own methods to increase circulation when there is a stringency in the money market, and to contract the currency when money is redundant.

A taxed credit currency he considers the best method, supplemented by power granted the secretary to handle a $100,000,000 reserve fund, sending it into the market when needed and withdrawing it when not needed.

GILLETTE IS CONVICTED.

Found Guilty of Murdering His Sweetheart, Grace Brown.

Herkimer, N. Y.—The jury in the trial of Chester E. Gillette for the murder of his sweetheart, Grace Brown, at Big Moose lake, on July 11 last, Tuesday night returned a verdict of guilty in the first degree.

The jury, which had deliberated for five hours, sent word at 11 o'clock that a verdict had been reached. A moment later it filed into the courtroom and at 11:15 o'clock an officer who had been sent for Gillette, returned with the prisoner.

It was learned that the jury had some difficulty in reaching an agreement and six ballots were taken before the 12 men agreed. Up to that time the jury had stood 11 for conviction and one for acquittal.

There are, and have been for some time, all kinds of rumors that Gilette has been overheard to make some kind of a confession that he killed Grace Brown. Some of these stories are that jail officials heard him confess to his lawyers; others that he told a visitor who called on him that he had struck the girl and that the visitor told the district attorney. Nobody connected with the case in any way will confirm any of these stories.

District Attorney Ward refused to confirm or deny the report that Gillette was overheard to make a confession to his attorney that he struck Grace Brown at Big Moose lake.

COUNT BONI IS SNUBBED.

Many French Deputies Leave Chamber When He Speaks.

Paris. — Count Boni de Castellane spoke in the chamber of deputies Thursday during the debate on the Algeciras treaty. Half the members of the chamber of deputies abruptly left the house when the count ascended the tribune.

The snub was given deliberately in the presence of the diplomatic corps and the entire cabinet.

Count Boni stood, hands in trousers pockets, with a flippant smile on his face during the confusion occasioned by the withdrawal of more than 200 deputies.

When quiet was restored Boni addressed the chamber, apparently not having been disconcerted by the rebuke. He was jauntily attired, wearing a lavender colored waistcoat, a red necktie, and he spoke easily, almost airily. He argued that France was continuing the policy of ex-Foreign Minister Delcasse, which aimed at the conquest of Morocco.

Then he took his seat, in the midst of almost deathlike silence in the chamber. No one applauded him or replied to him. He was treated with contemptuous indifference.

The chamber ratified the Algeciras treaty by unanimous vote.

HORROR AT CORNELL

FOUR STUDENTS AND THREE TOWNSMEN PERISH IN FIRE.

CHI PSI HOUSE BURNED

Great Heroism Is Displayed by the Boys and Volunteer Firemen in the Work of Rescue.

Ithaca, N. Y.—The $200,000 mansion of the Chi Psi fraternity at Cornell university—the finest chapter house in the world—burned early Friday, and seven persons perished in the conflagration. Of these four were students, and the others prominent townsmen who had responded to the alarm in the capacity of volunteer firemen.

The bodies of the dead, with the exception of those of W. H. Nichols, of Chicago, and F. W. Grelle, of East Orange, N. J., were recovered. Friday night it was decided to dynamite the ruins to facilitate the search for the missing bodies:

The dead are:

Attorney Alfred S. Robinson, hook and ladder company No. 3.

John C. Rumsey, hardware merchant, hose company No. 5.

E. J. Landon, salesman; hose company No. 4.

F. W. Grelle, of East Orange, N. J., '10.

O. L. Schmuck, of Hanover, Pa., '07.

W. H. Nichols, of Chicago, '07.

James McCutcheon, Jr., of Pittsburg, Pa., '09.

The injured are:

H. S. Decamp, of New York, '09.

Henry M. Curry, of Pittsburg, Pa., '09.

R. R. Powers, of Atlanta, Ga., '10.

W. W. Goetz, of Milwaukee, '09.

H. A. Uihlein, of Milwaukee, '07.

G. R. Sailor, of Pittsburg, Pa., '07.

C. J. Pope, of East Orange, N. J., '10.

The heroism of the volunteer firemen who died attacking the fire was matched by the heroism of Schmuck, who reentered the burning building in a futile effort to save Nichols, his room-mate, and who died later from his injuries, and by the courage of McCutcheon, who remained in the flames until fatally burned, to assist his comrades to escape. Pope, the freshman, received his injuries while seeking to rescue other members of the fraternity.

Among those earliest on the scene, and who contributed most of the work of rescue from the flames which had already converted the first floor of the doomed dormitory into an inferno, were several Cornell football men. All did effective work. It has been declared that the work of Sam Halliday, the old fullback, and of Earle and Gibson, the halfbacks of the season ended, united with that of the Chi Psi men who risked their lives that their brothers might live, will be remembered long in the annals of Cornell.

The cause of the fire will probably never be discovered. The building is an unsightly wreck, with no particle of its inner furniture remaining. Cornell is deprived of one of its landmarks, for the lodge was built in 1881 by Jennie McGraw Fiske, at a cost of $130,000. The daughter of the lumber king, John McGraw, who was one of Cornell's early great benefactors, never enjoyed her palace, and entered it only after death.

Around the house have clustered the memory of the great fight for the Fiske millions waged between Prof. Willard Fiske, the husband, and Judge Boardman, as the representative of Cornell, to which Mrs. Fiske had left the bulk of her estate.

LYNN FACTORY BLOWN UP.

Eleven Persons Are Injured and Many Buildings Burned.

Lynn, Mass.—The explosion of a boiler Thursday in the four-story factory building of the P. J. Harney Shoe Manufacturing company on Alley street and the fire which immediately followed destroyed 14 buildings in the West Lynn manufacturing district, causing a total loss estimated at about $520,000. Eleven persons were injured, one, Miss Celia Tradenburg, an operative in one of the burned factories, being in a critical condition at a hospital. In addition to the direct loss, the shoe manufacturers will suffer severely from the interruption to their Christmas business.

The fire swept over several acres, burning three other factory buildings, the Boston & Maine railroad station and a number of small dwellings.

Kansas Grain Law Void.

Kansas City, Mo.—The Kansas grain inspection and weighing law was declared void Thursday by Judge S. R. Peters, special master appointed by Judge Pollack of the United States circuit court.

INDICTED FOR LAND FRAUDS

TRUE BILLS RETURNED BY GRAND JURY IN UTAH.

Railroads and Officials Charged with Discriminating Against Certain Shippers.

Salt Lake City.—The federal grand jury that is investigating coal land frauds in Utah and charges that railroad corporations have discriminated against certain shippers made a partial report Friday afternoon. Indictments were returned against the Union Pacific Railroad company, the Oregon Short Line Railroad company, the Union Pacific Coal company, the Utah Fuel Coal company and several of the highest officials representing the Harriman and Gould corporations in Utah.

Bench warrants for the arrest of persons accused in the two indictments were issued. Bonds in the case of each individual accused was fixed at $3,000.

Fred R. Maynard, of Washington, assistant attorney general, who has been conducting the investigation before the grand jury, is authority for the statement that two other indictments charging perjury before the grand jury have been returned. The lands were filed on in March, 1905.

Assistant Attorney General Maynard stated that when the grand jury reconvenes after the holidays the inquisition will be resumed. The indictments returned Friday, he said, mark only the beginning of the government's probing operations in Utah and Wyoming, and the violations of laws alleged in these indictments are only incidents of a gigantic system of fraud that has been in operation in the west for many years.

The indictment against the Utah Fuel company and the six agents of that company is based on the methods used in acquiring about 1,400 acres of coal lands in Sevier county, Utah.

The two men indicted for perjury proved to be Theodore Schulte, the employe of an insurance firm, and Thomas A. Moore, abstractor in the county recorder's office. Both were arrested Friday night and released on $2,500 bail.

The other defendants have not been formally arrested, but have, it is given out, arranged to appear before United States Commissioner Baldwin today.

GREAT DISTRESS IN CLIFTON.

Town Swept by Flood Is in a Most Deplorable Condition.

Solomonville, Ariz.—Late details of the Clifton flood disaster indicate a most deplorable condition among the inhabitants and tremendous loss of property. Practically every building in the town is damaged. Many were swept entirely away. Numerous escapes from death are reported. Two men were swept through the streets and saved themselves by catching the awnings of a store and breaking through the plate glass front. Patients in the hospital were placed in a car and sent to higher ground before the flood reached the building.

Monday night in Clifton was a night of terror, as practically the entire population stood upon the hills unsheltered. It is believed that many persons in the Mexican quarter of whom no one has any record were drowned.

CONVICT-MADE GOODS HIT.

House Passes Law That Permits States to Bar Them.

Washington.—By a practically unanimous vote the house Friday passed the bill limiting the regulation of interstate commerce between the several states in articles manufactured by convict labor or in any prison or reformatory.

The law abrogates the interstate commerce law as at present applied to convict-made goods, thereby affording to the different states and territories the right to inhibit the shipping of convict-made goods within the confines of any state or territory.

The fine and jail sentence will be annulled only on condition that they clean up their dairies by April 1 and quit feeding swill to cattle.

The Old Reform Days.

We found the lumber woods of northern Minnesota during the winter of 1893 94 95 and 96 a place that was so overcrowed with men that there was not work for one half of them. If you succeeded in getting employment you were paid from eight to $20 per month, and the usual answer to a man that made inquiry at one of the lumber camps for work was, we have all the men we want, but you can go to work if you want to. If a man worked a week, or so and asked the forman what wages they were paying, he would be told to go up to the office and find out, and when he came up to the office he was usually paid off at about eight dollars per month and discharged, and there was always plenty of men to take his place that had walked into the woods, to get something to do to earn a few dollars to get something to eat a little more substancial than reform. Here we found about the same conditions that were on the railroad and that was the boss could work the men as long hours as he wanted to and pay them as small wages as he wanted to, and if they did'nt like it they could quit, and there was always plenty of halfstarved laboring men that had walked in to the woods ready to take their place.

Now days as soon as a laboring man steps off a train at a lumbering town or center in Northern Minnesota he is met by a gentleman who asks him if he wants to work in the woods. Mr. labor streightens up and asks him how much are you paying? –

The answer is, from 35 to 60 dollars per month, and if you want to go to work we will send you out in the morning, and if he goes he is treated like a human being because they are afraid if they don't use him well he will quit them and go elsewhere and they can't get a man to take his place. Which way would you rather have it, Reform or Business?

The tillers of the soil are supposed to be kings of the land but they had their troubles during these reform times. There are very few farmers in Northern Minnesota, and especially in the newer settled parts of it, who do not have to have a little credit during the summer season, and while they were enjoying this reform period, when they went down to their local merchant they saw a sign posted up which read "No Credit" when they asked for an explanation they were told, that the merchant could not sell any goods on time as he must have the cash in his till or the goods on the shelf. Oh well says farmer John I can fix that all right, I will just step down to the bank and make a small loan to buy my summer groceries. When he comes to the bank his old friend the cashier smiles on him but says they have not got a dollar to loan out no matter what security he gives and Mr. John farmer has to go home without his groceries, and drink sage tea for coffee sweetened with reform.

But notwithstanding these conditions we went into the campaign in 1894 red hot for reform but a little coled off, so by that time the people would begin to listen to a reasonable speech delivered by Knut Nelson and would not threaten to mob him, as they did in 1892, but they were still after the free silver, but seemed to be out of luck that year, as we lost Boen, and never heard of him again until last fall, when he came up as the Socialist candidate for Congress.

Kaiser Wilhelm as a Scot.

Kaiser Wilhelm of Germany has a liking for posing for pictures in all kinds of military costume. The illustration is from a recent photograph showing him in the dress of a Scottish chieftain. The picture leaves the impression that the ruler of Germany would enjoy playing soldier in a theatrical troupe if it were not inconsistent with the dignity which he must maintain.

Colonel Guerra.

The Cuban insurgent leader Colonel Faustino Guerra had a force under him in the province of Pinar del Rio estimated at from 3,000 to 4,000 men. He was a prominent figure in the negotiations relative to peace between the opposing elements in Cuba.

A Famous Shrine.

A shrine which should be of interest to autumn brides is that which may be found in the Spanish Church of Our Lady of Atocha. To this sanctuary the wedding gowns of Spanish queens have been taken for centuries past to be hung for awhile on the image of the Virgin, which is believed to possess miraculous virtue. The wedding gown of the new Queen Victoria was taken here in accordance with custom and hung on the sacred image

Chinese Gambler's Penance.

A Chinese cook named Chin Kan had been engaged by a wealthy Chinese in Ho In street in Canton. All the money he earned had been lost in gambling. On one occasion his master paid him some money for the provisions he supplied. The cook lost all the money at one stake. Finding that his debts were accumulating day by day, on the twenty-fourth day he went into the kitchen and chopped off the forefinger of his left hand as a self punishment and warning in order to relinquish this evil habit of gambling in the future. He became unconscious through the pain, but was brought round again in a few minutes.—Singapore Times.

M. O. In Chicago as Dead as Caesar.

One of the most remarkable reversals of public opinion on record is that which has taken place in Chicago in the past year in the matter of municipal ownership and operation. The municipal ownership theory, which a little more than a year ago flourished here with so much vigor as to attract the attention of the entire civilized world, is now the deadest duck in the pond. Apparently nobody believes in it any longer. Certainly nobody ever talks any more about it.—Chicago Journal.

A Theatrical Superstition.

They were rehearsing a new play, and every one was nervous, for the first night was close at hand. The play was a tragedy, yet at its end the dying heroine, as the curtain descended, said: "Three beers, please."

Those words concluded the play. Yet they were entirely out of keeping. The concluding words should have been, "I die, but, since I have saved you, I die happy," or something to that effect.

A dramatic critic new to the business asked how it was that the tragedy ended with "Three beers, please," and the stage manager said:

"Superstition. It is always thought bad luck in rehearsals of new plays to speak the last sentence before the opening night. He who has the last sentence to speak substitutes some meaningless phrase for it. If he dared to speak the true phrase the prospects of the play would be thought doomed. Some playwrights won't even write the last line of a play. They whisper it to the assembled company on its first reading, and from that day till the actual production the line is never again heard."—New Orleans Times-Democrat.

The Revolver.

The revolver is of dubious service in war. Its only function there is as a cavalry weapon. Indeed, it is an evolution of the medieval purpose to provide horse soldiers with a firearm. In the cavalry the weapon is effective only up to fifty yards. It has no value for hunting. The average man can do more execution on birds and beasts with a slingshot. The only purpose which the revolver serves is to kill another man, and even for that purpose its usefulness is overestimated.—New York Mail.

Where the Audience Was.

A London actor appearing at a cheap theater in Salford found so small an audience that he sought out the manager for an explanation. "You see," the manager told him, "my people are at the Halle concert." "Oh," the actor said, surprised, "I should hardly have thought your patrons would care much for high class music." "No," the other explained; to tell the truth, they go to pick pockets."

"Naming" a Member.

It is an ancient belief that a man's name has some mysterious sympathy with his nature, whence arise such stories as that of Rumpelstiltskin, whose power over a human being vanishes the moment that his name is pronounced aloud. It has been suggested with some show of reason that the modern practice of "naming" a refractory member of the British house of commons is merely a survival of this belief, which the Norsemen brought into England.

A Kiss That Brought Death.

Courtship in Spain is regulated by the strictest etiquette. As is well known, a young man is never left alone with his fiancee. Daughter of Joe Wheeler.

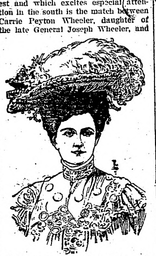
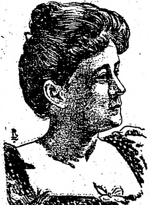
A romance which is of national interest and which excites especial attention in the south is the match between Carrie Peyton Wheeler, daughter of the late General Joseph Wheeler, and Gordon M. Buck, a native of the south, now a New York lawyer. Mr. Buck's bride was sponsor for the south at the last reunion of the Confederate Veterans' association, and her appearance was the signal for enthusiasm.



Fru Eva Nansen.

Fru Eva Nansen, as she is styled in her own country, wife of Professor Fridtjof Nansen, the explorer and first Norwegian minister to the court of St. James, is known in Norway for her many talents and especially for her gifts as a singer. When Norway separated from Sweden there was talk of its becoming a republic. Had that been the outcome she might have been the first lady of the land, as Nansen was talked of as the possible president of the possible republic. Fru Nansen is the daughter of the late Professor Michael Sars of the University of Christiania.



The man or woman who smiles, filling the hearts of friends from day to day with sunshine, does more for the world than all the medicines of the apothecary.

An Art Anecdote.

Edward Rosewater, founder and editor of the Omaha Bee, had a sincere love of art. He hated pictures that indicated scamped work, so called impressionistic pictures that were merely rough and hurried sketches and so called portraits that bore no likeness to their originals. A young painter showed Mr. Rosewater one day a portrait of a mutual friend.

"That a portrait of Smith!" the editor exclaimed. "I'd never have known it."

"Oh," the artist exclaimed, "I didn't try for a likeness, you know. I tried for an effect—an effect in grays."

"I know a man in New York," said Mr. Rosewater, "who had his portrait painted last year. It cost him $4,000, and he was very proud of it. When it came home he showed it to his cook.

"'Well, Mary,' he said, 'how do you like this portrait?'

"'Sure, sir,' said the cook, 'it's lovely. It's beautiful. It's divine.'

"'And of course,' said my friend, 'you know who it is?'

"'Oh, of course I do, sir,' said the cook. 'Of course, of course.' As she spoke she kept drawing nearer to the picture, studying it more and more closely. 'Of course, sir,' she said. 'It's you or the mistress.'"—Buffalo Enquirer.

The Sultan's Rebuke.

An ambassador of a well known European monarch was riding in the streets of Constantinople when one of the sultan's carriages rolled by. Seeing it was guarded, his curiosity got the better of him, and when the carriage reached him he was daring enough to peep in at the passenger. He was surprised and pained to receive a blow in the face from an attendant in charge. Mad with rage, he demanded audience of the sultan. The sultan listened attentively and for a moment appeared lost in thought. At last he spoke: "My dear ——, I have gone carefully into the case and see exactly how it stands. You are, of course, a gentleman. Therefore you would never have committed such a breach of good manners as you allege to have taken place. Therefore no attendant could possibly have struck you. The whole affair seems to be a product of your fancy. Let us dismiss it."

His Constancy.

A story is told of General Sir Alfred Horsford. who believed in a celibate army. A soldier once sought his permission to marry, saying he had two good conduct badges and $25 in the savings bank. "Well, go away," said Sir Alfred, "and if you come back this day year in the same mind you shall marry. I'll keep the vacancy." On the anniversary the soldier repeated his request. "But do you really, after a year, want to marry?" "Yes, sir, very much." "Sergeant major, take his name down. Yes, you may marry. I never believed there was so much constancy in man or woman. Right face. Quick march!" As the man left the room, turning his head, he said. "Thank you, sir. It isn't the same woman."

A Pretty Experiment.

A very pretty effect may be produced by using some aniline dye in powdered form in alcohol. Fill a small glass with the alcohol and drop the smallest portion of the dye on its surface. It will shoot down through the liquid, like a strand of color, dividing into two branches, which will subdivide again and again until you have, apparently, an inverted plant in miniature growing before your eyes. An arrangement of mirrors may be made to throw the reflection of this on a screen or a wall, and the enlarged shadows will be very interesting to watch.

Lifting a Kettle of Hot Water.

Some time when the teakettle is bubbling and boiling on the kitchen range lift it quickly by its handle and set it on the open palm of your other hand This sounds like a very foolhardy thing to do—as if your hand might be blistered in a twinkling—but you will find that you can hold the teakettle which has just come from a roaring fire for some time without hurting you. Try it and then see if you can tell the reason why you are not burned. Be sure, however, that the water is boiling strongly before you make the experiment.

FILLING UP THE CANADIAN WEST.

The American Settler Is Welcomed to Canada.

A number of the leading newspapers on this side of the line have been noticing the growth of the Canadian West in recent years, and draw attention to the fact that there seems to be no abatement of the influx of settlers to that great grain-growing country. The Buffalo Express thus refers to the subject:

"Canada West continues to grow. There were 4,174 homesteads entries there in July of this year, as against 3,571 in July, 1905. Canada plumes herself over this fact, with becoming pride. But what appears to make our neighbors happiest is the statement that of these 4,174 homesteaders, 1,212 were from this side of the line. Little is said about the 97 Canadians who recrossed the border to take up homes in Canada West, or of the 808 from Great Britain, or of the 1,236 from non-British countries. It appears that the item in this July report that makes Canada rejoice most is this of the 1,212 American farmers who decided to try their fortunes in Canada West.

"The compliment is deserved. The 1,212 were mostly from Dakota and other farming states, and go into Canada fitted better than any other class of immigrants for developing the new country. They take capital with them, too, say Canadian papers proudly. In every way, they are welcome over there."

As the Express well says, the American is welcomed to Canada, and the reasons given are sufficient to invite the welcome. The Ameriacn farmer knows thoroughly the farming conditions that prevail in the Canadian prairie provinces, and is aware of every phase of agricultural development in recent years.

In practical knowledge of what is wanted to get the largest return for labor and investment he is by long odds superior to any European settler. He knews what is required to bring success, and he is able and willing to do it, and his future causes no apprehension to the successful Canadian farmer. The agent of the Canadian Government, whose address appears elsewhere, says that the difference between the manners and customs of the farmer from Dakota, Oregon or Minnesota and the farmer from Manitoba, Saskatchewan or Alberta is not nearly so marked as that between the farmer of the Maritime provinces and the Ontario tiller of the soil. Hence the welcome to the free homesteads of the Canadian West, and there are hundreds of thousands of them left, that is extended to the settler from the Western States.

Scheme Worked Out Badly.

Congressman Sulzer represents a densely populated district on the East side of New York city. It occurred to him some months ago that though there are no gardens in his district some of his constituents might grow plants in boxes placed on window sills or fire escapes, so he sent an assortment of seed to the inmate of a model tenement house owned by one of his friends. The latter met him a few days ago and said: "See here, Sulzer, I want you to cut out that seed business. It's the limit!" "Why, what's the matter?' asked the astonished Sulzer, and he explained why he had sent the seeds. "Oh, you meant well, all right," returned the friend, scornfully, "but when I visited the place the other day I found that about ten families were raising cabbage, cucumbers and tomatoes in the bath tubs."

LIMB RAW AS PIECE OF BEEF.

Suffered for Three Years with Itching Humor—Cruiser Newark U. S. N. Man Cured by Cuticura.

"I suffered with humor for about three years off and on. I finally saw a doctor and he gave me remedies that did me no good, so I tried Cuticura when my limb below the knee to the ankle was as raw as a piece of beef. All I used was the Cuticura Soap and the Ointment. I bathed with Cuticura Soap every day, and used about six or seven boxes of Cuticura Ointment. I was thoroughly cured of the humor in three weeks, and haven't been affected with it since. I use no other Soap than Cuticura now. H. J. Myers, U. S. N., U. S. S. Newark, New York, July 8, 1905."

TO COPE WITH CROUP.

Remedies the Mother Should Have on Hand for Emergencies.

When a doctor cannot be secured promptly in an emergency it is necessary to have a good remedy always on hand when children are inclined to be croupy.

A mother who will provide herself with half a pint of raw linseed oil can fight the worst case of croup she may meet with.

It is said to be an unfailing remedy, and for quick results it beats anything else which can be given for that dread disease.

Half a teaspoonful is a dose, unless the child is choking very badly; then give a teaspoonful.

It acts two ways. In the first stage of croup, where there is not much mucus, it is loosened and carried off through the bowels.

In the second stage it causes vomiting, but, unlike ipecac, it leaves no soreness of the throat as an after difficulty.

It is rarely necessary to give more than one dose, when the child will get relief and go to sleep again.

This simple remedy is one that is within the reach of every mother and one that can be kept on hand at all times, and while it is in the house the dread membranous croup need cause no terrors.

BEEF TEA REQUIRES CARE.

Time Must Be Given for Extraction of Nutriment.

Every home nurse is supposed to know how to make beef tea, yet it is surprising how many failures are to be recorded in this apparently simple operation. The fault generally is that too little time is given to the cooking. The point to be borne in mind is that, as far as possible, the whole of the nutriment of the beef is to be extracted. The best method of doing this is to proceed as follows: Remove all the fat and skin from one pound of fresh gravy beef, cut it up in small pieces and put it into a stone jar with a pint of water and a little salt. Replace the lid of the jar and let it stand all night. The next morning place the jar in a saucepan of boiling water and let it simmer gently, but never boil, for five hours. Strain the fluid through a colander, but instead of throwing away the residue of the meat pound it in a mortar into a pulp, pass it through a wire sieve and add it to the beef tea, says Woman's Life. Beef tea made according to this recipe contains all the fiber and albumen of the meat, and is therefore much more nutritious than beef tea in the form it is usually given.

PUTTING GLAZE ON BREAD.

Simple Matter of Introduction of Steam Into Oven.

The glaze on Vienna rolls and bread is one of the reasons that this delicious breadstuff is so popular. A glaze on other breads also has frequently been desired. According to the statements of an authority on bread-making, this glazed surface effect can be produced by the admission of steam into the oven while baking. It is done in this way: Place an open pan of water in the oven, and let it heat long enough to give off sufficient steam to saturate the air in the oven. When the loaves are put in they should be quite cool, and owing to their coolness a momentary condensation of steam is effected over the whole surface of the loaf. The steam coming in contact with the loaf renders soluble the starch on the outside surface, and as the water dries off leaves a soluble starch, a part of which has been converted into dextrin. This also serves the purpose of keeping the interior of the loaf moist by preventing the rapid evaporation.

Black Chocolate Cake.

Cream one-half cup of butter, beat in one and one-half cups of sugar, then two beaten eggs. Add one-half cup of sour milk in which one teaspoonful of soda has been dissolved, two cups of flour and one teaspoonful of vanilla. Have ready two squares of chocolate melted, stir in one-half cup of boiling water, and when smooth and well blended, stir it into the cake batter. Bake in square tins, making two layers, then put white frosting between the layers and over the top.

A Laundry Secret.

The best way to wash dainty neck scarfs is to make a strong lather in boiling water; when nearly cold wash the scarf quickly. Then dip it in cold, hard water in which some common salt has been dissolved (to preserve the colors); rinse, squeeze and hang out to dry in the open air, pin at its extreme edge to the line, and the more rapidly it dries the clearer it will be.

Plum Dowdy.

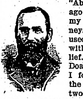
Scald and stone the plums and to two cups of plums add one-half cup of stewed apple. Sweeten to taste and add a little cinnamon or nutmeg. Put one-third of fruit into a buttered pudding dish, dot with butter and lay strips of pastry across. Add some fruit, butter, pastry, fruit and a top crust of rich pastry. Bake 30 to 40 minutes in a moderate oven.

How to Keep Cake Fresh.

Cut a slice of new bread about an inch thick and place in the tin with the cake. This will help keep the cake fresh for some time. The bread must be renewed when stale. An apple placed in the cake tin will answer the same purpose as the bread and should also be renewed when withered.

DOES YOUR BACK ACHE?

Profit by the Experience of One Who Has Found Relief.



James R. Keeler, retired farmer, of Fenner street, Cazenovia, N. Y., says: "About fifteen years ago I suffered with my back and kidneys. I doctored and used many remedies without getting relief. Beginning with Doan's Kidney Pills, I found relief from the first box, and two boxes restored me to good, sound condition. My wife and many of my friends have used Doan's Kidney Pills with good results and I can earnestly recommend them."

Unearthing the Briber.

During a recent campaign in England a certain woman called on a laborer's wife and asked if her husband would vote for Lord Blank. "No, he won't," was the reply. "But, remember the blankets and coals you got from the clergyman." "Never mind them. He's been promised a new pair of trousers if he votes for Mr. Dash." Suspecting that this was a case of bribery that must be outdone, the woman canvasser offered a sovereign if the woman would tell her who had promised the trousers. The money paid over, the woman smiled. "I promised them," she said, "and I'll buy them out of your sovereign."

Tea on the Down Grade.

Tea drinkers are finding scant encouragement in a report recently made by a large tea exporting house in Yokohama to its American customers. Incidentally it indicates that the United States is not alone in facing increased cost of living. The report says: "Owing to the rapidly increasing cost of living in Japan labor costs more, and in consequence cultivation of the tea gardens is less generous and extensive than formerly, and less care and skill are expended in picking and curing the leaf. Hence the average quality of the teas now offered for sale is below that of seasons prior to the war, and for the same reasons we are not likely in the future to see any reversion to the excellence of former years."—New York Sun.

Sympathy Not Needed.

Dr. Fridtjof Nansen, Norway's famous arctic explorer, now minister to Gerat Britain, makes light of the sympathy expressed by many persons anent the "hardships" of travelers. He says: "There never was such misplaced sympathy as commiserating a man who has lived in the wilds. Most men who travel in out-of-the-way parts of the world do so because they like it. People who live in the center of what is called civilization do not understand, cannot realize, the spell that getting close to nature, battling with nature, has on the heart." He does not believe in the use of alcoholic beverages, holding that while liquor will raise the temperature for a few minutes, after that it falls lower than before.

NO MEDICINE.

But Change of Food Gave Final Relief.

Most diseases start in the alimentary canal—stomach and bowels.

A great deal of our stomach and bowel troubles come from eating too much starchy and greasy food.

The stomach does not digest any of the starchy food we eat—white bread, pastry, potatoes, oats, etc.—these things are digested in the small intestines, and if we eat too much, as most of us do, the organs that should digest this kind of food are overcome by excess of work, so that fermentation, indigestion, and a long train of ails result.

Too much fat also is hard to digest, and this is changed into acids, sour stomach, belching gas, and a bloaty, heavy feeling.

In these conditions a change from indigestible foods to Grape-Nuts will work wonders in not only relieving the distress but in building up a strong digestion, clear brain and steady nerves. A Wash. woman writes:

"About five years ago I suffered with bad stomach—dyspepsia, indigestion, constipation—caused, I know now, from eating starchy and greasy food.

"I doctored for two years without any benefit. The doctor told me there was no cure for me. I could not eat anything without suffering severe pain in my back and sides, and I became discouraged.

"A friend recommended Grape-Nuts and I began to use it. In less than two weeks I began to feel better, and inside of two months I was a well woman and have been ever since.

"I can eat anything I wish with pleasure. We eat Grape-Nuts and cream for breakfast, and are very fond of it." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich. Read the little book, "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs. "There's a reason."

Missed Chance for Fame.

The astronomer, Lalande, narrowly escaped being made famous by a discovery. He accidentally struck Neptune with his glass on May 8, 1785, but supposed it was a star. He put it down in his notebook as a star and recorded its exact situation. Two days later he struck it once more and made a record of it. But when he looked over his notes he found he had it down as being in two different places, and as a star cannot move in 48 hours he supposed he had made a mistake in one of his notes. If he had used his mind a little less mechanically he easily might have been a Columbus.

A Misunderstanding.

Apropos of a misunderstanding on the canteen question, Gen. Frederick D. Grant said at a dinner in Washington:

"It is like the case of my friend Maj. Green. Maj. Green said to his servant one morning:

"'James, I have left my mess boots out, I want them soled.'

"'Yes sir,' the servant answered.

"The major, dressing for dinner that night, said again:

"'I suppose, James, that you did as I told you about those boots?'

"James laid 35 cents on the bureau.

"'Yes, sir,' said he, 'and this is all I could get for them; though the corporal who bought 'em said he'd have given half a dollar if pay day hadn't been so far off.'"

Care of Children's Teeth.

At Strasburg, Germany, a dental clinic has been opened at the university for the treatment of school children. Hither all the school children are sent, in order, by their teachers. Each child is quickly examined, as many as eighty children being dealt with in an hour, and nearly 300 a day, by a single doctor. Teaching goes hand in hand with treatment. The doctor tells the child how to use a tooth brush, sees that he uses one, and sends him home to practice with it. The movement is spreading. In Wiesbaden and Mulhausen school dental clinics are to be erected.

MINNESOTA NEWS

Important Meeting.

Crookston.—The first annual meeting of the Red River Valley Immigration and Development association of Minnesota and North Dakota, held in this city was largely attended by delegates from all portions of the valley. The session was devoted entirely to the business of the organization and especially to the adoption of a constitution and by-laws.

State Auditor S. G. Iverson was a guest of the association, and spoke informally of the benefits to be derived from organized efforts carried out by a campaign of publicity. He congratulated the association on representing a section of country rich in soil, delightful in climate and alive with wide awake business men.

A. L. Craig, general traffic manager of the Great Northern road, spoke on the interest railroads had in development work and predicted that the association would result in much good to the Red River Valley.

Letters were read from James J. Hill, Wallace G. Nye, secretary of the public affairs committee of Minneapolis Commercial Club; C. L. Sawyer, secretary of the Minneapolis real estate board; H. V. Eva, secretary of the Duluth Commercial Club; Gov. John A. Johnson and others.

Doubts are Cleared.

Duluth.—Information has been received at the local land office which clears all doubts in the minds of those who have filed upon land in the Chippewa reservation at Fond du Lac.

Early in November an order was received from Washington holding up final proofs on lands in this reservation, but under the instructions just received those who had made application for final proof prior to the order issued in November will be allowed to complete their filings.

The order says that contests may be instituted, but that the sucessful contestant will have to await the outcome of the future disposition of the lands by the commissions. No new filings will be permitted until this question is settled.

All the unsold lands, known as the ceded Chippewa lands, are specifically withdrawn from sale, occupation, or any disposition whatsoever, the probable purpose of this withdrawal being to allow a survey of the lands to be made, with a view of ascertaining whether they come under the provisions of the drainage act.

Wolves Raid Sheep Pen.

Crookston.—According to John Hanson, a farmer living northeast of here, wolves in that section of Polk county are unusually numerous and vicious this winter. Hanson says that a few nights ago wolves broke into his sheep fold and killed twenty-nine fine wethers, besides maiming a number of others so badly that they had to be slaughtered.

Hanson says that he was aroused about 2 o'clock in the morning by a disturbance in the sheep pen, and dressing hurriedly went out to see what was the trouble. He said he found several large timber wolves in the pen worrying the sheep. They apparently had sated their appetites and were then amusing themselves by chasing the frightened sheep about the pen and snapping at their limbs.

Hanson was unarmed, but yelled lustily, in an attempt to frighten the marauders away. They paid no attention to him, however, and it was not until he armed himself with a club and went after them that they slunk away, snapping and snarling.

Chased by Wolves.

Eveleth.—After a wild ride of five miles, during which he was closely pursued by a pack of wolves, James Bartoson reached this city late at night. One of his horses was so nearly exhausted that it probably will die.

Bartoson is a timber cruiser and had been in the woods all day making estimates. In the evening, after taking supper with a homesteader, he started on the return trip to this city.

It was not long after leaving the homesteader's shack that he discovered that he was being followed by a pack of wolves. He whipped up his horses and by keeping them at top speed managed to keep ahead of the hungry wolves, although several of them were so close upon him at times that the box of the sleigh shows the scratches made by their claws.

Annual Meeting.

The official announcement of the annual meeting of the Minnesota State Agricultural Society has been made by Secretary E. W. Randall, who calls attention to the provision for the choice of delegates made by the state law organizing the society. Representation of the society is from local agricultural organizations throughout the state or counties where such organizations do not exist, by appointment by the county commissioners. Delegates are also permitted from such societies in any way connected with the promotion of agriculture so that the society is made up of men definitely interested in agricultural pursuits.

The meeting will be held in the assembly room in the court house on January 8, 9 and 10, and on the latter day the election of officers will take place. The railroad rate of fare and one-third has been made.

NEWS NOTES.

St. Paul.—The city controller figures that there will be a deficit of $45,000 in the city funds.

Lonsdale.—J. C. Drozda, postmaster here and manager of the Waterman & Drozda Lumber Company, committed suicide by shooting.

Hayfield.—The Chicago Great Western depot burned at 5 o'clock in the morning. The express and freight was saved. The damage amounts to about $1,000.

Grand Rapids.—Herman Ring, thirty years old, who has lived on a homestead near Rice Rapids, about five miles above Cohassett, has been missing from home more than four weeks.

Eveleth.—Joe Henning is the latest victim of a hunting accident in this vicinity. He was shot by Sam Bard at Haenke's farm, near here, a rifle ball taking effect in the muscles of his right thigh.

Mankato.—Brakeman Clute, of the Omaha freight train No. 19, westbound, was instantly killed at Le Sueur while fixing an air brake. The cars bumped and crushed his head. His home was at St. James.

St. Peter.—Although a great many farmers have been crippled in corn shredders, Mrs. John Huber of Sharon township is probably the first woman to have a hand crushed in one of the deadly machines.

Mankato.—Theodore G. Thorston, a hard working and prosperous farmer living in Sundown township, Brown county, was found lying in the road a mile and a half from his home, with his skull crushed.

Brainerd.—The residence of E. Renslow was destroyed by fire this morning. The loss on the building is $2,000; insurance $1,000; on contents, $1,500; insurance $600. J. C. Jamieson's loss on goods stored is $700, with an insurance of $500.

St. Paul.—E. K. Slater, state dairy and food commissioner, announced the appointment of John McCabe of St. Peter to the position of assistant dairy and food commissioner, to succeed Milton A. Trenham, the appointment to be effective January 1.

St. Peter.—Lieutenant Ralph P. Yates, Jr., of the Philippine constabulary, who was seriously wounded in a fight against the Pulajanes on the island of Leyte on Dec. 5, is a Minnesota man. His father, Ralph Yates, Sr., is a veteran Chicago & North-Western engineer and lives at New Ulm.

Moorhead.—Sensational charges are made against persons residing in the eastern part of Clay county, in the vicinity of Muskoda and Hawley. According to Justice of the Peace Herring of Hawley, 10,000 railroad ties belonging to the Northern Pacific railroad have mysteriously disappeared.

Moorhead.—Fire has damaged the Dwight mill here to the extent of $11,000. The fire started from a hot journal in the ceiling of the storage room. The sparks dropped down into a bin of wheat and started a fire, which was difficult to get at. Finally the wheat bin was flooded and the fire was extinguished.

St. Paul.—John A. Ryan, state hotel inspector, made his report to the state auditor for the quarter ending November 30. He inspected 369 hotels, receiving $275.50 in fees. His expenses were $347, which added to his salary of $300, makes a total outlay of $647.50, leaving a deficit of $371.50 for the quarter.

Bemidji.—Bert Brannick, wanted in Allison, Iowa, for a crime alleged to have been committed in 1902, has been arrested by Deputy Sheriffs John Bailey and Art Wright in this city. Brannick was under indictment in Allison, when he disappeared, and for the last four years an Iowa sheriff and Beltrami authorities have been on the lookout for him.

Mankato.—John Felber, who lives in section 3, Decoria, probably secured the largest return per acre of any farmer in the county this fall. He raised thirty-five bushels of wheat to the acre, thirty-three bushels of rye, and fifty bushels of oats. His income from the portion of his farm devoted to wheat was $25.20 per acre.

Grand Rapids.—Further prosecution of C. C. Miller, former treasurer of Itasca county, will be postponed until June next, as a result of an application for a continuance before Judge Spooner. Notice of the motion for a continuance was given on the first day of the term, but it was not expected anything would be developed on the hearing which would be productive of delay.

Northfield.—D. E. Wagner, a brakeman, was fatally injured here yesterday and died a few hours later. Wagner was on top of the train, and slipping, fell to the ground. He was caught by a brake beam and was dragged along the track for some distance before the accident was discovered and the train stopped. Wagner was twenty-five years old, single, and lived at Hastings.

Crookston—Edith, the two-year-old daughter of C. W. Wilder who lives here, is dead as the result of having swallowed a tack. The child had clambered upon a chair and reaching a shelf upon which there were some tacks, put one of them in her mouth and started to climb down. The chair was overturned, and in falling the tack was forced down the child's throat. As soon as the mother discovered that the child had swallowed a tack she started for a physician, but before she could reach town the child was dead.

JESSE C. RUMSEY SENTENCED AT MARSHALL, MO.

Chicago Boy Who Held Up and Robbed Two Trains Pleads Guilty —Gets Minimum Penalty.

Marshall, Mo.—Jesse Clyde Rumsey, the Chicago boy who robbed the Alton-Burlington train on Nov. 25 and the Rock Island limited on Nov. 8, both near Glasgow, Mo., pleaded guilty here Thursday to two charges filed against him. He was given the minimum sentence, 10 years imprisonment on each charge, and was immediately sentenced to 20 years. He was taken to the penitentiary later in the day.

Four informations were filed against Rumsey. At his preliminary hearing he pleaded not guilty. Thursday he offered to plead guilty to two charges connected with the Alton-Burlington hold up if promised the minimum sentence. He refused to plead guilty to the Rock Island robbery, although he had previously confessed to having committed this hold-up also. The maximum penalty for train robbery in Missouri is death.

The robberies were most daring. Single-handed Rumsey forced the trainmen to go ahead of him and help rob the passengers. He was overpowered by Conductor Heywood, of the Alton-Burlington train, and the money and jewelry secured at that time was recovered. He was landed in jail four hours after the second robbery was committed.

GEORGE BURNHAM, JR., GUILTY.

New York Insurance Company Officer Convicted of Larceny

New York.—George Burnham, Jr., a vice president and general counsel of the Mutual Reserve Life Insurance company, was convicted Tuesday of larceny of $7,500 of the company's funds. The prosecution and conviction of Burnham was an outgrowth of the investigation of insurance companies in this state by a legislative committee a year ago. Two other officers of the insurance company, Frederick A. Burnham, president, and George D. Eldridge, vice president, were indicted at the same time as the man who was convicted to-day.

The charge against George Burnham, Jr., was that in 1901 he paid J. Douglass Wells with company funds for a loan alleged to have been made to Frederick A. Burnham, the president, and that the payment was concealed by false entries in the books of the insurance company.

KAISER DISSOLVES REICHSTAG.

Resents Defeat of Government Bill for Troops in Africa.

Berlin.—Emperor William dissolved the reichstag Thursday and ordered new elections, in consequence of the government's defeat, by 178 to 168 votes, on the bill authorizing what the ministry contends is an adquate numbr of troops to end the insurrection in German Southwest Africa and hold the colony against a recurrence of the rebellion.

The clericals, socialists, Poles and one wing of the radicals voted against the government, while the conservatives, national liberals and moderate radicals supported the government.

APPEAL TO RAIL PRESIDENTS.

Commerce Commission Acts on the Car Shortage.

Washington.—In view of the complaints of car shortage resulting, it is said, in the failure to transport the necessaries of life and coal for household use, the interstate commerce commission has sent the following telegram to the presidents of a number of western and northwestern railroads:

"From many parts of the country, and particularly from your section, the interstate commerce commission is receiving numerous and importunate complaints of car shortage and failure to transport the necessities of life. In various places in the northwest it is represented that people are actually freezing because sufficient coal for household use cannot be procured, owing to extraordinary delays in moving that article. The commission therefore urges you to make every possible effort to meet at once the needs and relieve the sufferings of those dependent upon the facilities of your road.

JEREMIAH CURTIN IS DEAD.

Distinguished as Linguist and Translator of Novels of Sienkiewicz.

Bristol, Vt.—Jeremiah Curtin, a distinguished linguist and philologist and well known also as a translator of Russian and Polish novels, died here Friday of Bright's disease.

Mr. Curtin was 66 years old. He was proficient in 70 languages, excelling as a linguist, it is said, any other man. After his graduation from Harvard, in 1863, he became secretary of the United States legation in Russia and later acting consul there. For many years he was actively engaged in special work for the Smithsonian Institution, visiting many countries and studying the language and folk lore of the people. As an author he was best known as the translator from Polish of the works of Henry Sienkiewicz. During the past four years Mr. Curtin had resided in Washington, D. C., and Bristol.

STARTLING TALE FROM HAWAII.

Two Complete Japanese Regiments Said to Be There.

Honolulu.—It is stated here and has been reported to the United States government at Washington that two regiments of Japanese, completely officered, are in Honolulu disguised as laborers. Whether they are armed is not known.

Washington.—The Honolulu report that it was stated there that Japanese troops, fully officered, were in that city disguised as laborers and that the fact had been reported to this government met with an emphatic denial here Wednesday night. Acting Secretary of State Bacon said he had heard nothing of such a report. Secretary Taft stated that no such report had ever been made to this government, and at the Japanese legation the story was promptly denied.

King Oscar Rests Well.

Stockholm.—King Oscar rested well Friday, sleeping four hours. His temperature and heart action were better. He had a Christmas tree brought into his sick room and distributed the gifts, saying he did not wish to be deprived of his last Christmas pleasure.

DROPS NEW SPELLING

PRESIDENT YIELDS TO OPPOSITION OF LOWER HOUSE.

PUTS END TO CONFUSION

Representatives to Vote on Increase of Salaries—Senator Dubois Assails Roosevelt in the Smoot Case.

Washington.—President Roosevelt will withdraw his simplified spelling order to the public printer and hereafter all documents will again be printed in the old-fashioned style.

Mr. Landis, of the joint committee on spelling, had a conference Thursday with the president, when the latter said that he did not wish to have spelling overshadow matters of great importance and expressed a willingness to revoke his order for the new spelling in case the house of representatives should go on record as opposed to the system. Accordingly, late Thursday afternoon Mr. Landis introduced the following resolution:

"Resolved, That it is the sense of the house of representatives that hereafter in presenting reports, documents, or other publications authorized by law, ordered by congress or either branch thereof, or emanating from the executive departments, their bureaus or branches, and independent officers of the government, the government printing office should observe and adhere to the standard of orthography prescribed in generally accepted dictionaries of the English language."

The measure was passed without a dissenting vote.

To Vote on Salary Increase.

The house also reached an agreement under which it looks as though there would be a vote on the much mooted question of an increase in the salaries of members of congress, cabinet officers, etc. Mr. Littauer sought to have the question taken up Thursday, but Mr. Underwood objected at this stage of the proceeding. He said, however, that he would agree to consider the action at the conclusion of the reading of the bill, and when it shall be reported to the house from the committee of the whole.

The senate Thursday listened to the second speech which has been made this session against the continuance of Reed Smoot as senator from Utah. It was delivered by Senator Dubois, of Idaho, who after reviewing in detail the workings of the Mormon church and Mr. Smoot's prominent connection therewith, concluded with the charge that President Roosevelt has used the weight of his administration to assist the Republican Mormon vote in the last election.

To Probe Lumber Trust.

The house, after some discussion, adopted a resolution of Mr. Miller of Kansas, authorizing the secretary of commerce and labor to investigate the causes of the high prices of lumber in the various stages of manufacture and sale. This investigation is to be made with the particular object of ascertaining whether or not present high prices are the result of a trust.

New Cabinet Men Confirmed.

Washington.—The senate Wednesday confirmed the nominations of William H. Moody, of Massachusetts, to be an associate justice of the supreme court of the United States; Charles J. Bonaparte, of Maryland, to be attorney general; Victor H. Metcalf, of California, to be secretary of the navy, and Oscar S. Straus, of New York, to be secretary of commerce.

The opposition to Messrs. Moody and Bonaparte which had been raised in the senate by a number of Democratic senators was not strongly pressed at the session Wednesday and no roll call was asked for. On the viva voce vote for Mr. Bonaparte, however, there were a number of negative votes, estimated at about 15.

No Increase for Congressmen.

Washington.—The house of representatives was brought face to face Friday with the proposition to increase the salaries of its own members, senators, the vice president, the speaker of the house and members of the president's cabinet, while the legislative, executive and judicial appropriation bill was under consideration. Though it passed favorably on the proposition as applied to other officials, it refused to make the order for members of either house of congress.

Heavy Snow Blocks Trains.

St. Paul, Minn.—The worst snowstorm in years is reported by the railroad companies which have western extensions. The trains in western North Dakota on every line are snowbound, and in some cases are lost track of. It is even reported that some of the Great Northern through trains are completely snowed in and cannot be located. The snow in many cases is piled 20 feet high, and traffic is at a standstill.

58,368 IN REGULAR ARMY

SECRETARY OF WAR TAFT'S REPORT IS MADE PUBLIC.

More Officers Needed—Gives High Praise for Work Done in San Francisco After Earthquake.

Washington.—In his annual report, made public Tuesday night, Secretary of War Taft devotes much space to the work of the army at San Francisco after the earthquake. He accords the highest praise to Gen. Funston, Gen. Greely, the other officers and the enlisted men.

The report shows that the actual strength of the regular army is 3,709 officers and 54,659 enlisted men. During the year there was a total net decrease of 1,4..

These figures do not include 3,177 men of the hospital corps.

There were also in the service 25 officers and 554 enlisted men of the Porto Rico regiment and 116 officers and 5,013 enlisted men of the Philippine scouts. This is a net increase of two in the Porto Rico regiment and a net decrease of 45 in the Philippine scouts.

Including the hospital corps, Porto Rico regiment and Philippine scouts with the regular army, there was a total net decrease from last year of 1,341.

Secretary Taft renews his recommendation of last year that congress provide that the detail to the general staff of line officers below the rank of major should create vacancies in the line.

The total number of enlistments in the army during the fiscal year ended June 30, 1906 (exclusive of the hospital corps and Philippine scouts), was 24,083. The percentage of native born among the original enlistments was 89. Of the 24,083 accepted applicants, 21,303 were native born, 2,683 were of foreign birth, 14 were Indians, 13 were born in the Philippine islands (enlisted for band musicians), and 70 were born in Porto Rico.

The relative number of desertions in the army has continued to increase, the number for the past fiscal year being 7.4 per cent of the whole number of enlisted men in service during that period, as against 6.8 per cent during the preceding year.

RICHARD DEVISES PEACE PLAN

Says French Laymen May Make Declarations as to Worship.

Paris.—There has been issued from the office of the archbishop of Paris, Cardinal Richard, an important communication which will facilitate a way out of the present church difficulty. This communication sets forth that declarations made by laymen relative to worship are not in disobedience to the instructions of the pope, provided their purpose is honestly to avoid disturbances, and admits that such declarations do not infringe upon the hierarchy of the church, as the Vatican has only forbidden clergymen to carry out the required legal formalities.

This recognition of the layman's right to a declaration will permit of the carrying on of worship in accordance with the law, but in the meantime the church officially maintains its position of not submitting to the state.

Paris.—Thursday was marked by the total absence of any of the sensational or dramatic incidents anticipated in alarmist quarters in connection with the execution of the law of separation.

The parish priests everywhere celebrated mass in the presence of unusually large congregations, but the actions of the authorities were confined to noting infractions of the law and citing the priests and vicars to appear before justices of the peace.

In many parishes, both in Paris and the interior, Catholic laymen came forward Thursday and spontaneously filed declarations for the holding of services in the designated churches during the coming year. If this practice is generally followed it will be a distinct victory for the government.

AGAINST STATE INSURANCE.

Wisconsin Senatorial Committee Finds Plan Not Feasible.

Madison, Wis.—The majority report of the committee appointed by the last state senate to investigate the feasibility of establishing a state life insurance department in Wisconsin, has completed its investigation upon which it has been engaged for two year and has filed its report with Governor Davidson. The committee is not in favor of having the state go into the life insurance business because it does not find it feasible at this time.

The report is signed by Senators Julius E. Roehr and James A. Frear, while Senator Jacob Rummel, socialist, whose party is trying to foster a number of state and municipal ownership projects in the legislature, dissents.

The Old Reform Days.

Boens record in congress was one continuous string of cyphers, and while we could not expect very much from him it would have encouraged us some had he intoduced one or two measures in congress that had been advocated by the party that elected him. By 1895 we sometimes thought that if a man differed with us in politicts that he might be doing so honestly for the best interests of the country in which we were existing, and not living at that time. About this time McKinley bogan to remark that there was never a time in the history of America when the people were so anxious to vote as they were at that time. However we went into the campaign of 1896 with Bryan as our leader and the battle cry of "No cross of gold", but the people were rather restless and were begining to think that it was not all boodle and coruption in the republican party, although there was a certain presentage of them that still believed that money was the ruling power in politicts, although the common people began to wonder how anyone could get ahold of any money.

The cities were suffering the same as the farming districts and villages and had free soup houses to keep the laboring men, that could not get a days work from starving. The receipt for the soup was something like this; 4 dozen rutabages, 4 dozen carrots 4 dozen good sized potatoes, 4 dozen onions, all chopped up fine. Then take a chicken and hang it in a window so the shade of it would fall directly over the pot the soup was cooking in, seasoned with salt and peper, and one pound of "reform". This would make a dose that would feed about 20 laboring men for one day.

There was an amusing idcident happened in one of the County conventions in northern Minnesota that year, that illustrates how suspicious the people were and how blind to reason they was if they thought there was being any money used to influence the voters.

There was a certain attorney who had done a good deal of work for the Populist and Democratic party, and was going to claim his reward as the nominee of the party for county attorney. His prospects for success were very bright up to the evening before the convention as he was backed by strong political friends, but on the night before the convention some politician sprung the story, that he was being backed for the position by some of the notorious gamblers and sports of the county, and that they were using money freely among the delegates to secure his nomination.

That was enough to settle the matter so far as he was concerned and although it was afterwards learned, that the story was not true, he was badly defeated in the convention, the next day.

We made a strong campaign that year on the strict principal of "reform", and we often think of how the fellows voice, (that cleanod out the farmors elevator at McIntosh), would tremble with excitement and anger when he said. "If the republican party are of the opinion that they can "bulldoze" the reform party they will find they are mistaken in the people that that they "were dealing with." Then we would all spittle on our hands and take a fresh holt of reform."

Congressman Steenerson is preparing a bill for the reopenig of the homestead lands of northern Mineesota for settlement, with the proviso that the homesteader shall reimburse the government for all expenses of drainage, if drainage is necessary. This will help some to settle up the norther part of the state, as it is not plesent to write to your friends back east, that they can not get any government land here on any terms, or conditions. Steenerson will be pretty sure to pass the bill, as he has a fashion of doing things for the interest of his district, in congress.

THE EARTH'S CRUST.

Its Rigidity Is About Equal to That of Granite.

Professor T. J. J. See of the United States navy has investigated the rigidity of the earth by mathematical processes depending on the theory of gravitation. He found that, even if fluid, the globe would have a rigidity greater than that of wrought iron, owing to the tremendous weight. The earth's matter under this great pressure acts as a solid and so vibrates in an earthquake, and the average rigidity of the whole mass is nearly equal to that of nickel steel. Nickel steel is one of the strongest and hardest metals known. The globe is thus proved to be capable of withstanding enormous strain. Dr. See proves that the rigidity of the earth's crust is about equal to that of granite, which is one-sixth that of steel, and that toward the center the rigidity rapidly increases. At the earth's center the imprisoned matter is at an enormously high temperature, yet under the great pressure there at work it is kept three times more rigid than the nickel steel used in the armor of a battleship.

This method has been applied also to the other planets. It turns out that the rigidity of Venus is greater than that of platinum and probably about identical with that of wrought iron. The rigidity of Mars is about equal to that of gold, while the rigidity of Mercury, the moon and other satellites is about equal to that of glass. The average rigidity of the great planets—Jupiter, Saturn, Uranus and Neptune—lies between eighteen and three times that of nickel steel. The great rigidity of these bodies is due to the great pressure acting throughout such large masses.

In the case of the sun the result is still more extreme. The average rigidity of all the sun's layers is over 2,000 times that of nickel steel. This result shows the effect of gravity in compressing and hardening a mass even when it is self luminous and at enormously high temperature.—Chicago News.

LONG LIVE THE BOSS!

Municipal Ownership Would Make His Position Impregnable.

Referring to the recent announcement that 51,146 persons are on the payroll of New York city, the Newark Advertiser declares that in the event of municipal ownership of street railways, electric light and gas plants, ferries and other public utilities the city employees would constitute a political army that would make a change of administration impossible.

It recalls the fact that 25,000 city employees in Philadelphia kept Philadelphia in the hands of the corrupt Durham machine for years, and only a great popular uprising overthrew the grafters.

"If Durham had had control of the street railroads and other public utilities in Philadelphia through municipal ownership," it observes, "he could have laughed at popular uprisings. He would have been as absolute in his authority as the czar."

The point is well taken.

In other cities the political situation under public ownership would be as it would in Philadelphia and New York. Bosses may be overthrown and grafters turned out whenever the public will it at present. Public ownership of all public utilities would end this. It would bind the people hand and foot and deliver them into the hands of political grafters.—Long Branch.

If thou love learning, thou shalt be learned.—Socrates.

The Domestic Problem.

"I once lost an Irish servant," remarked a German lady who was relating the trouble she had in keeping domestics, "because I could not convince her that 'mick' is a German name for a fly. One day my little baby daughter was seated in a chair near a window which opened on the piazza, where Bridget was at work. The window was closed, and a number of flies were busy bumping their heads against the panes in an endeavor to escape to the outside. They attracted baby's attention, who called out to me to look at them, at the same time saying, 'Mick, mick, mick.' Just then Bridget turned to speak to the baby and heard these words. And even today Bridget is firmly convinced that I instructed the baby to make fun of her."—New York Herald.

THE CASH BOY TALKS.

His Father's Idea of the Delights of Municipal Ownership.

"Say, boss," remarked our cash boy this morning, "my paw is red hot for minniesickle ownership. I don't know what that is, but paw says everybody is going to own everything and divide up the profits. He was telling ma about it last night.

"Ma asked him where the people would get the money to buy those things, as they would cost millions of dollars.

"Paw said, 'Issue bonds.'

"'Yes,' said ma, 'but how will you pay the bonds when they are due?'

"'Issue more bonds,' said paw.

"'But how about the interest?' said ma. 'Won't you have to tax the people for that?'

"'Why, no' said paw. 'Pay the interest with bonds.'

"'I don't see how you could do that,' said ma.

"'You dont, eh?' replied paw. 'Now, when we went to housekeeping, didn't I pay for all our furniture by giving a note, and when it came due didn't I give the man another note? You women know nothing about finance. You wait until the minniesickle ownership gets in power, we will divide the profits among the people, and no one will have to work. We will all be Vanderbilts. Won't you be proud of your hubby when he becomes part owner of all public utilities? You see, madam, there are some things you don't know.'

"And then paw looked wise. Ma stood and gazed at him for some time and then said:

"'Yes, there are some things I don't know, and one of those things is this: If there is a man more fit for the lunatic asylum than you, I don't know him.'

"Then I commenced to whistle 'Everybody Works but Daddy.' Say, boss, you see that lump on the back of my head? Paw has had that tune poked at him before, and I wasn't looking when his old shoe came flying my way."—Yonkers Statesman.

HOW CITIES LOSE MONEY.

Municipal Plants Pay No Taxes and Reduce Tax Receipts.

The subject of lost taxes is one that deserves far more attention than it usually receives from advocates of municipal ownership. There is scarcely a municipal plant in this country which mentions this item in its reports, although it is just as much an element in cost of production as coal and wages. The omission is readily overlooked, because it is a negative expense involving no direct payment, but only a loss of income to the city.

If you own a store for which you are receiving a good rental, and dispossess your tenant in order to occupy it yourself the rental value of the store becomes a charge against your business, just as it was previously a charge against your tenant's business, and you are out of pocket unless your profits exceed the rent you formerly received. Similarly if a city buys out or otherwise dispossesses a public service corporation the real, personal and franchise taxes formerly paid by the corporation become a charge against the operation of the municipal plant that succeeds the corporation, and the city is out of pocket unless the profits of its plant exceed the taxes lost.

Jungle Bungalow.

Building castles in the air is usually a vain occupation, but not so if one lives in the Mosquito Indian reservation, Nicaragua. Following the example of an ingenious Yankee planter, other owners of plantations on the Bluefields or Escondido river, known as Rama, have built aerial homes. Erected on the top of a seventy foot ibo tree and guarded by netting, the planter's house is safe from the approach of all animal life and is above the malarial mist that rises from the swamps and rivers at night.

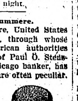
Samuel R. Gummere.

Samuel R. Gummere, United States minister to Morocco, through whose cleverness the American authorities obtained possession of Paul O. Stensland, the fugitive Chicago banker, has a post whose duties are often peculiar.



The sultan of Morocco is superior as a ruler to some of his predecessors, but he is a young man of many freaks and fancies, and to get on well with him the representative of the United States has to keep his wits with him all the time. Minister Gummere was United States consul at Tangier when the Perdicaris kidnaping occurred, and his efficient conduct during that episode resulted in his promotion to his present post. Now he has another feather in his cap.

HOW TO SHOW A PROFIT.

Tricky Bookkeeping Puts Losses on the Profit Side.

The printed report of a municipal electric light plant in Indiana has just been received. It shows a profit. There is no question about it. It shows a large profit. The figures are there in black and white. and they show a profit equivalent to 30 per cent of the gross income and 18 per cent on the capital invested. That is what we call a profitable business.

How was this plant able to make so good a showing? In a way so simple that any municipal plant could adopt it with success if its superintendent were good at figures. And the best of it is that it makes competition by private plants impossible because—well, stockholders are too inquisitive.

In the first place the fixed charges for interest on the capital invested and for depreciation were entirely ignored. Then no allowance was made for taxes, just by having municipal instead of private ownership. Next, while full charge was made against the water department and the city offices for lights and supplies, the superintendent conveniently forgot to charge the lighting plant with the water used in its boilers and condensers or with its share of the salaries in the city accounting department. Insurance was also overlooked. Finally, to make assurance of profit doubly sure, a number of items properly pertaining to maintenance were charged to "new construction." At the same time the charge for street and public building lights was quite as high as in surrounding cities served by private companies, which had somehow or other to provide for all these omitted items.

It is perhaps needless to add that except for the judicious way in which the superintendent prepared his report a considerable deficit would have appeared instead of the gratifying profits. Of course the taxpayers will have to provide the money to make good these paper profits, but they may not for some years see the connection between their profitable plant and the higher tax rate, and meanwhile are happy in the contemplation of its profits and will doubtless testify enthusiastically to the benefits of municipal ownership.

From the above we may deduce the following rule for showing a profit: First, omit all items of expense that can without too much danger of detection be saddled upon the general tax list or other departments; second, charge in as vague a way as possible to new construction as many items of maintenance as may be necessary to show a large profit. (N. B.—The profit must be large to provide for the contingency of some carping critic discovering one or more of the concealed items of expense and ruthlessly drawing them forth from their hiding places.)

If the above rule is scrupulously followed there seems to be no reason why every municipal plant should not show a profit.—"Concerning Municipal Ownership."

GONE OUT OF BUSINESS.

Millions Sunk In Unsuccessful Municipal Lighting Plants.

During the past few years at least sixty cities and towns in the United States have sold, leased or abandoned their lighting plants. In a few cases they still retain their distributing system, buying the current from some company, but in most instances they have gone out of the business entirely. A number of other places have made unsuccessful efforts to dispose of their plants.

As with few exceptions municipal lighting plants have been in operation but a short time, this is a remarkable showing of failure and one, it need hardly be said, that is sedulously avoided by those who for ends of their own are urging other cities to make similar experiments.

As it usually takes some years for a city to realize how great a burden it is carrying in its lighting plant, it is probable that the number of admitted failures will increase rapidly from now on, for, as an eminent electrical engineer recently said, "There are already indications that a considerable number of these municipalities which have engaged in improper undertakings are entering upon a period of financial difficulty."

AT THE ELEVENTH HOUR

BY PAUL LEAKE

BEN WILL alighted from the coach of the east-bound flyer at the Michigan Central depot. There was an absent look in his clear blue eyes, usually so keen in observation of his surroundings, and he was impatient at the slow progress of the crowd filtering through the gate. He paid no attention to the happy reunions of friends and relatives at the station; the exclamations of delight at the meetings fell on deadened ears.

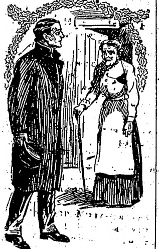
Pushing through the crowd, he hurried to a car and soon alighted at the old familiar corner. The street looked just the same. The house, however, was changed; it no longer looked like home. The old-fashioned shutters were missing, the quiet, sedate front was altered, and bay windows protruded above as well as on the ground floor.

"Mrs. Flabbins don't live here no more," said the untidy young woman who answered his ring.

With saddened eyes he retraced his steps to the corner. Entering the drug store he satisfied the proprietor that he was a stranger by buying a cigar and then rather diffidently requesting the privilege of looking at the directory. The only Flabbins he could find was Edward, who was credited with being in the saloon business.

"Is Mr. Flabbins here?" asked Will at the number indicated.

"That's me," replied a short, thick set man, with cold, gray eyes, and a roll of fat hiding the back of his collar. As he answered the stranger the color left his face. He recognized his step-brother. Ben saw that this was the cause, and smiled rather bitterly.



"Mother!"

"Where is mother?" he asked of the man behind the bar.

"I—I—don't know," stammered Flabbins.

"You lie, as you always did," said Ben, his jaw coming together like a steel trap and his blue eyes flashing. Flabbins moved toward the cash register.

"You need not trouble yourself," exclaimed Ben contemptuously, noting the movement. "I have no time to talk to you now, but I may return and—if I have cause—your revolver won't save you. Where is your father?"

"Dead," sulkily answered the saloon keeper.

"How long?"

"Four years."

"And mother?" Ben's voice was low, but there was a menace in it that caused Flabbins to draw a little closer to the register.

"I hain't seen her in three years. She left the house after a row wid Bess. You know what Bess is."

The next morning the following item was inserted in the leading papers of the city.

"WANTED—Information as to the whereabouts of Mrs. Daniel Flabbins. Box X, 21."

Eddying flakes formed a curtain of whirling white, shutting out the dreary landscape, and covering the frozen, jagged earth with a soft mantle of snow as, shaking himself like a great Newfoundland dog, Ben Will waited impatiently for the opening of the door of the great institution for the housing of the poor. When admitted, he paced the plainly but comfortably furnished reception room, hungry for a sight of his mother's face. The opening of the door caused him to turn with outstretched arms. His eyes, blinded by tears, saw a bent form moving slowly toward him; one hand, toil worn and brown, the blue veins standing out upon it, grasped a cane with which to steady the tottering footsteps; above the bent frame in which beat a mother's heart, crowning it with a glory all its own, was a sweet old face.

"Mother!"

"Ben, my own Ben!"

"Oh!" exclaimed Ben, quivering with anger, "to think they would allow you to go to the poor house. They shall suffer. They—"

"Hush, Ben," said his mother, softly, placing her hand over the lips of her son. "This is Christmas, and I am going home with you. Ah, such a happy Christmas. Well may we say 'Peace on earth and good will to men.'"

ATTRACTIONS OF WESTERN CANADA.

Magnificent Crop Returns for the Year 1906.

The manner in which the Canadian West has attracted settlers in recent years has caused many of our journals and public men to "sit up and take notice," to use a current phrase. From every European country and from almost every State in the Union large number of settlers have flocked to the prairie provinces of Canada, where free homesteads and wide opportunities are open to all who desire to avail themselves of them.

The greatest factor in attracting settlers lies in the inherent richness of soil and suitability of climate for producing what is universally considered to be the finest wheat in the world—the "No. 1 Hard" of Canadian growth—and other cereals that rank in the very first class. This year the harvest returns were: Wheat, 90,000,000 bushels; oats, 76,000,000 bushels; barley, 17,000,000 bushels; and when it is considered that the entire population of the three provinces—as evidenced by the quinquennial census just completed—is only 810,000, it is easily seen that the lure of the Canadian West is in its agricultural potentialities.

Another feature which attracts the settler is that railway construction is proceeding with such rapidity that almost every district is within easy reach of outside markets, and that good prices for all lines of farm products rule practically from the commencement of agricultural operations. This is a factor which did not prevail when the earlier settlements in the West were made in Canada and in the United States, and has given a great impetus to Canadian Western settlement in recent years.

The free grant system of homesteads which prevails in the prairie provinces, by which every settler who is able and willing to comply with the conditions of actual settlement (by no means onerous), is given 160 acres free, except $10 for entry, is a great drawing card, and in the last fiscal year gathered in over 189,000 additional to the western population, of which 57,796 were from the United States.

The further fact, as is strongly brought about by the agent of the Canadian Government, whose address appears elsewhere, that a splendid common school system, practically free, prevails throughout the entire country, and is easy of access in even the most remote districts, is another great inducement to the settler who has the future welfare of his family in mind, and this, coupled with the fact that western Canadian law and order are proverbial, completes a circle of good and sufficient reasons why the tide of immigration has set in so steadily toward the country to the north of our boundary line.

The Highest Bridge.

Work is now in progress on a suspension bridge over the famous "Royal gorge" of the Arkansas river, in Colorado, at a point where the channel is only 50 feet wide at the bottom and 230 feet wide at the top. This bridge will span the river 267 feet above the surface of the water, and will be, therefore, by far the highest bridge in the world. The material will be of flat steel and steel cables, the curved girders finding secure attachment in the solid sides of the canyon. The floor of the bridge will be of plate glass one and one-half inches thick, to afford visitors the pleasure of looking down the chasm. On each side will be strong, high steel railings. The bridge is part of an electric railway scheme.

One Peril of Ballooning.

One of the strange experiences of a balloonist is that of falling into "a hole in the air," which Mr. Rolker reports as follows: "So you continue sailing, enjoying the present with little thought of the startling surprises that may be before you. Ahead of you, unseen, may be what the balloonist calls a 'hole in the air,' resembling the vortex of a maelstrom, and down this you may literally fall at a rate which is terrifying until, by sacrificing two or three bagfuls of sand at once, your pilot checks your downward flight. But these 'holes' are scarce, and, as a rule, the atmosphere is of uniform carrying power."—American Magazine.

A Remarkable Lighthouse.

At the entrance of Odessa harbor is a sunken rock which has been the source of danger to navigators for centuries past. The Russians have decided to erect on this rock a lighthouse which will rival in originality and interest any lighthouse of ancient or modern times. This is to be a gigantic figure of Christ, holding aloft in his left hand a cross. The light, one of exceptional brilliancy, is to be placed in the center of the cross. What more fitting emblem for a lighthouse can one conceive than this figure of the light of the world guiding the mariner on life's sea to the port of safety!

New Hobby for Collectors.

The ingenuity of collectors in the discovery of new fields having been exhausted, there is still open to them that of collecting the finest specimen of forged or spurious works of art and this is capable of becoming a hobby scarcely less interesting or admirable than the pursuit of the genuine article.—Art Journal.

Gas Engines on Canal Boats.

Miss Frances Gardner, of 369 Jackson boulevard, Chicago, Ill., writes: "Gentlemen: I heartily indorse Doan's Kidney Pills, as I have found by personal experience that they are an ideal kidney remedy. I suffered with complications of kidney complaint for nearly five years, spent over $100 on useless remedies, while five boxes of Doan's Kidney Pills cured me in a few short weeks. I am now enjoying the best of health, have a fine appetite, the best of digestion, and restful sleep, all due to your splendid pills."

VISION SHOWED SON DEAD.

Italian Mother's Dream Followed by Discovery of Body.

A strange case of telepathy in connection with a murder is arousing much interest in Milan, Italy. A woman named Lazzaroni awoke suddenly at three o'clock the other morning, and calling her son John, who lives in her house, told him that his younger brother, Leopold, living in the outskirts of the town, was dead.

The mother was deeply affected, but John tried to comfort her by ascribing her fears to a bad dream. At dawn, however, Leopold Lazzaroni, a handsome and strong young man, the owner of a dairy, was found dead at a spot some distance from his dwelling. After having made an examination of the body, the doctors affirmed that Leopold had been murdered actually at three o'clock in the morning.

The next day the culprits were arrested.

The facts of the mother's vision, which have been duly authenticated, are the subject of endless discussion.

The Sunny South.

Now when all outdoor farm work has ceased in the north, the term "sunny south" and all that it means, appeals with full force to the northern farmer as he realizes that with him it is a case of remaining indoors for the next several months consuming everything that has been produced during the growing season. In the "sunny south" something can be raised every month in the year, and practically every day can be spent out doors. No blizzards. No sunstrokes. Cattle-raising is very profitable. Large profits are made with little labor in growing fruits, vegetables, etc., for northern markets. Strawberries and cantaloupes are great revenue getters. Water unsurpassed. Work plentiful. Lands cheap and productive. For reliable information, address G. A. Park, General Immigration and Industrial Agent, Louisville & Nashville Railroad Company, Louisville, Ky.

Squirrels as Waiters.

It has taken Fisk Goodyear of Burchtown, Pa., two years to train his pet squirrels, but his efforts are now repaid, and on Thanksgiving he treated his friends to a surprise.

Gathering half a hundred or more gray squirrels, Mr. Goodyear taught them to go into the woods and pick up nuts, carrying them to his home.

On Thanksgiving night at a dinner his guests noticed a small board running from a window to a nut bowl. The host gave one knock on the table with his knife. A squirrel hopped down the plank and dropped a chestnut into the bowl. Two raps brought a squirrel with a walnut, three knocks a shellbark.

Finally, a grave old squirrel took his place and cracked the nuts, winding up the performance by brushing off the crumbs with his thick bushy tail.

The Evils of Constipation.

are many; in fact almost every serious illness has its origin in constipation, and some medicines, instead of preventing constipation, add to it. This is true of most cathartics, which, when first used, have a beneficial effect, but the dose has to be continually increased, and before long the remedy ceases to have the slightest effect. There is one preparation, however, that can be relied upon to produce the same results with the same dose, even after fifty years' daily use, and this is Brandreth's Pills, which has a record of over 100 years as the standard remedy for constipation and all troubles arising from an impure state of the blood.

Brandreth's Pills are the same fine laxative tonic pill your grandparents used, and are for sale everywhere, either plain or sugar-coated.

Competent for Jury Service.

During the ice trust trial in Philadelphia a prospective juror was quizzed about the quantity of ice he used. "I use a little occasionally," he said. "How much? Enough to temper a highball?" "What do you mean by a highball?" roared the attorney. "An amateur," murmured the juror, "can not presume to enlighten an expert." "This man is a competent juror," chimed the court, and the trial proceeded.

Mary Anderson De Navarro, who recently issued her memoirs, has sent a copy of the book to the Commercial club of Louisville, Ky., with the following note: "For the Commercial club of Louisville, with the best wishes of Mary Anderson De Navarro, a loyal lover of Kentucky."

TRAFFIC IN HUMAN FLESH.

German Hospital Officials Accused of Serious Offenses.

A sensational case has been occupying the Hamburg law courts. Recently the head of a workingmen's association, Herr Schonberg, publicly accused the Hamburg hospital of carrying on a large traffic in corpses. He declared that closed coffins were delivered to relatives of the deceased containing only ashes and rubbish or a wooden image. In several cases the body had been placed in the coffin in the presence of the relatives, and extracted after their departure. The leg of a man who had suffered from a peculiar disease was cut off and replaced by that of a dead woman. In this state the body was exhibited to the relatives. A former employe of the hospital, whose trial for selling bodies was the occasion of these disclosures, declared that he had seen the arms of a dead man amputated and replaced by a girl's arms in order that the man's relatives should suspect nothing. It was also proved that warders had cut off and sold heads and other parts of corpses for their own profit and without the knowledge of the doctors. In two cases at least coffins were buried containing only parts of the body.

TORTURED WITH ECZEMA.

Tremendous Itching Over Whole Body —Scratched Until Bled—Wonderful Cure by Cuticura.

"Last year I suffered with a tremendous itching on my back, which grew worse and worse, until it spread over the whole body, and only my face and hands were free. For four months or so I suffered torments, and I had to scratch, scratch, scratch, until I bled. At night when I went to bed things got worse, and I had at times to get up and scratch my body all over, until I was as sore as could be, and until I suffered excruciating pains. They told me that I was suffering from eczema. Then I made up my mind that I would use the Cuticura Remedies. I used them according to instructions, and very soon indeed I was greatly relieved. I continued until well, and now I am ready to recommend the Cuticura Remedies to any one. Mrs. Mary Metzger, Sweetwater, Okla., June 28, 1905."

BROKE THE WILDCAT'S BACK.

Philadelphia Man Victorious in Hand-to-Hand Combat.

Unarmed and alone, Thomas Dyke was attacked by a wildcat on Locust mountain, south of Mount Carmel, Pa. He had been in Ashland and started to drive home. His horse stepped on a nail and he put the animal in a stable.

Then he started to walk home and was on the mountain when the cries of a wildcat alarmed him. A few minutes later he saw the beast ten feet in front of him. The animal finally sprang. He jumped aside and as the body of the cat struck the road he leaped upon it. For several minutes the fight between the wild animal and the man went on. At length by a quick swing he broke the animal's back.

A physician dressed the several deep scratches on his face and hands, but otherwise he was uninjured.

Pugilist's Sudden Conversion.

"Kid" Wedge, a light-weight pugilist who claimed to be champion of Arkansas, was training for a fight with Guy Buckles in Omaha. Suddenly he "got religion" and sent word to the management of the club where he was to appear explaining why they would have to make other arrangements. At the same time he mailed a copy of the New Testament to Mr. Buckles, who, as he fully expected to win the fight which had been arranged, is not yet entirely resigned.

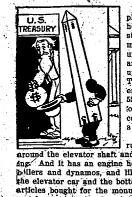
One of the Ways Devised by Congress to Spend Uncle Sam's Money—Government Biologist Records Tones Heard in the Wildwood—Other News Notes from the Capital.



WASHINGTON.—If any gentleman contemplates building himself a striking sort of a home he should not construct it after the form and style of the Washington monument. Costs too much to keep it up. The secretary of the treasury has just sent to congress an estimate of the amount he will need during the next year for the upkeep of the monument and it totals $11,820. This, of course, includes the elevator and machinery, but after all no one would care for a house 555 feet high without an elevator in it, and therefore the cost of maintaining an elevator must be considered by anyone contemplating that kind of a habitation.

The Washington monument has an elevator running up through its middle and stairs winding around the elevator shaft and between it and the walls, or skin, of the building. And it has an engine house underground not far away. It has engines, boilers and dynamos, and likewise a heating plant; including oil stoves for the elevator car and the bottom and top floors of the monument. Among the articles bought for the monument are fuel, waste, lights, oil, packing, tools, matches, paints, brushes, brooms, lanterns, rope, nails, screws and lead.

To run the thing there is a force of men consisting of one boss, down on the books as the custodian, at $100 a month; one steam engineer, at $80 a month; one assistant steam engineer, at $70 a month; one foreman, at $55 a month; one elevator conductor, at $75 a month; one attendant on the bottom floor, at $60 a month; one attendant on the top floor, at $60 a month; three night and day watchmen, at $60 a month apiece. So that with running the elevator, preventing people from committing suicide by jumping out of the windows at the top, as some fool every little while attempts to do, and keeping an eye on the property to prevent it from being stolen, the monument costs a tidy sum every year.

The watchmen, if you ask what in the world they find to do to kill time between pay days, will assure you that if they were not "Johnny on the spot" all the while, the monument would be all chipped off and carried away in a few weeks by the great American brotherhood of rubbernecks.

GOVERNMENT EXPERT WRITES BIRDS' MUSIC.

OH—OH—POLLY WANTS—PO-OH-OLY WANTS—OH-OH— A CR-R-RACKER!
WELL WHAT DO YOU THINK OF THAT

Henry Oldys, assistant biologist in the department of agriculture, has 1,000 samples of bird music written in popular form so that it is possible for the human voice exactly to imitate the songsters of the field and the forest. He has recorded the actual tones, setting them in the proper musical key, and their reproduction is easy for anybody who can read musical symbols.

Mr. Oldys has been gathering bird language for 13 years and during most of that time has been devoting his expert knowledge of the subject to official reports which find their way in the government archives. He has extended the work of other eminent naturalists and to-day is foremost among those who have made a study of this unique branch of science.

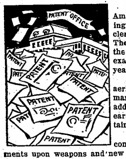
The forests of the south and the fastnesses of the west have been the handbook of this student. He has collected as far as possible all the bird notes capable of reproduction for human expression. Asked if he would formulate these in popular form he said that it probably would not be possible, as his samples are short and often disjointed. He thought the composer, however, might supplement the work of the scientist.

There is in this collection, then, the possible groundwork for a magnificent bird opera. If the blending of notes can successfully be accomplished the theater goer of the next decade may be treated with a wonderful entertainment and may hear in the course of one evening the songs of the feathered musicians of the world executed by human vocal chords.

Mr. Oldys explains that many of the bird tones are almost identical with those of the human. Taking this as a basis he has recorded the symbols whereby the human can read and the human voice express these harmonious sounds.

Among the more prevalent birds whose tones are like those of the human and can be reproduced and written as music are the wood thrush, the chewink, the song sparrow, the field sparrow, the Baltimore oriole, the wood peewee and the Carolina wren.

PATENT OFFICIALS DEMAND LARGER QUARTERS.



The inventive breed is not dying out in America. The commissioner of patents at Washington calls loudly for larger quarters; more clerks and bigger pay for overworked examiners. There is such a flood of new devices pouring into the patent office as was never seen before. The examiners are fairly swamped and are a full year behind in their work.

Naturally enough, motors and submarine and aerial navigating devices lead the list. Modern man insists upon flying, and the inventor who adds speed to his passing to and fro upon the earth, in the air, or in or under the water is certain of his reward.

The inventors are no believers in the early coming of peace among the nations, for improvements upon weapons and new explosives are well nigh as numerous as new motors. Yet with all this gunning for gain and racing for fame on the part of the inventors the chances are that some unconsidered trifle like the wooden ball with a rubber string or the globe catch for women's purses will win the largest rewards in the future as in the past.

OFFICIALS RESENT SPYING BY TELEPHONE.

BILL FOR PRIVATE USE OF TELEP

If they are deprived of all personal use, for whatever purpose, of the telephones in their office, why should not the private conversations held on the wire between the office of the secretary of the navy and his office and residence in Baltimore be charged up to Mr. Boneparte, is a question that has arisen in the disturbed minds of a number of chiefs of bureaus in the navy department.

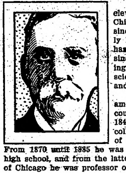
Developments in the navy department have disclosed to even the highest officials that it is impossible for them to hold private conversations over the department telephones. H. C. Gauss, private secretary of Secretary Bonaparte, has taken the situation in hand and made private detectives of the "hello" girls in the department's telephone exchange. For some time the operators have been listening to every conversation possible and keeping tab of all those which according to their judgment have no bearing on business of the department.

Officials were given a surprise when they learned that an "official eavesdropper" had been appointed, particularly by the secretary's private secretary. The matter of looking after the telephone business of the department usually falls to the chief clerk, and there is general resentment that censorship has thus been put on their conversations.

While none of the officials takes the stand that the government should be charged up with private conversations, they do bitterly resent the method that has been adopted to "spy" on them, and it is likely that the matter will be called to the attention of the secretary.

PEOPLE TALKED ABOUT

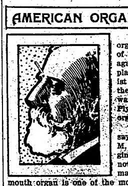
MAY HEAD CHICAGO UNIVERSITY



Dr. Harry Pratt Judson, who will probably be elevated to the presidency of the University of Chicago, has been acting head of the institution since the death of President Harper, and is widely known as an educator of proved ability. He has been connected with the University of Chicago since 1892, and at the time of his selection as acting president was head professor of political science and dean of the faculty of arts, literature and science.

Dr. Judson comes of a family noted as being among the founders of the Baptist church in this country. He was born at Jamestown, N. Y., in 1849, and was graduated in 1870 from William college, which subsequently gave him the degree of LL. D., as did Queen's University of Canada. From 1870 until 1885 he was teacher in and principal of the Troy (N. Y.) high school, and from the latter date until his affiliation with the University of Chicago he was professor of history in the University of Minnesota. Dr. Judson has written a number of valuable books and has been decorated by the German emperor.

AMERICAN ORGAN PUZZLES SAINT-SAENS



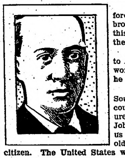
M. Camille Saint-Saens, the renowned French organist, who is in this country for the purpose of giving a series of recitals, found himself up against a hard proposition when he essayed to play an American organ. The venerable organist is 71 years old, and he found it hard to learn the American instrument. It was said that he was instructed by Scott Wheeler, the organist of Plymouth church, who is himself one of the best organists in New York city, if not in the country.

Mr. Wheeler said that it was hardly fair to say that he had instructed the famous organist. M. Saint-Saens was somewhat discouraged on beginning his tour, and he was told that if he could not play the Plymouth organ he could not play many of the American instruments, for the Plymouth organ is one of the most complete in the country. The American is altogether different in its construction from the French organ, the stops, pedals, etc., being arranged on a distinctive plan. M. Saint-Saens found especial difficulty in mastering the fan-shaped pedals of the American instrument, but he is understood to have mastered the essential points in the difference of construction and to have gone on his way rejoicing.

M. Saint-Saens is more of a composer than he is an executant, and he is better known by his works than by his playing, although he can play a number of instruments. He has appeared at Carnegie hall, in Manhattan, but here he played the piano with the orchestra. He is to visit all the large cities of the United States. It is probable that he will also conduct the rendering of some of his own compostions.

The French organist has probably heard of the annoying incident which happened to his great compatriot, Guilmant, in the New York Avenue M. E. church, two or three years ago. The organ in this church is regarded as one of the finest instruments in the United States, and it was built at large expense. Guilmant gave two recitals there. The first went off all right, but at the second one, the large auditorium being filled in every part, the fine instrument gave out right in the middle of the playing by Guilmant of one of his celebrated pieces, and the great organist was in a pet in a second. Someone went upon the platform and asked if there was anyone in the audience who knew how to get over the trouble. Some one volunteered to get the big organ going again, and Guilmant finished his recital without further hindrance.

SAYS AMERICA WILL RULE WORLD



Alfred Mosely, capitalist and one of England's foremost thinkers on industrial subjects, who has brought a party of 500 English school-teachers to this country to study our educational system, says the United States is destined to rule the world.

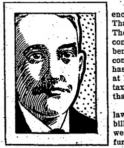
This is Mr. Mosely's expedition of this kind to America. In 1902, when he brought a party of workingmen over to study our factory methods, he said:

"It was the arrival of American engineers in South Africa that brought prosperity to that country. We couldn't get along; we made a failure of it till Americans like Gardiner Williams, John Hays Hammond and others came to show us the way to success. If I were only 20 years old I would take steps to become an American citizen. The United States will yet rule the world, industrially, educationally, ethically and probably—when you get ready to use your armed force—physically. We have come to America to learn how to succeed. We are quite honest and open about it. Your enormous success, which has placed the markets of the world at your mercy, is due to the education of your people and to your superior methods of production. We want to know how to do things as well in England.

Mr. Mosely says betting is a great evil among English workers. He believes in a government lottery as conducted in Germany to take limited wagers and guard the people against being swindled.

With his own sons, Mr. Mosely is putting both the British and the American universities to the test. One son is a sophomore at Yale and another is a freshman at the University of Cambridge, England.

FOE OF WISCONSIN LOBBYIST



Charles McCarthy runs the legislative reference department of the Wisconsin legislature. That doesn't mean anything until you analyze it. Then you find that it has saved the state of Wisconsin millions of dollars directly, that it has benefited tens of thousands of citizens of the commonwealth to an incalculable amount, that it has practically put the lobbyist out of business at Madison, and that for all these good things the taxpayers have paid less than $5,000 a year, and that for a very few years.

"Mac" is a Ph. D. He understands law and lawmaking. He believes it is cheaper to make a bill right before it is enacted than to find out its weak points later after expensive litigation. He furnishes the solons bales of statistics on every subject under consideration. On one occasion "Mac" discovered that a certain affable gentleman, addicted to the liberal purchase of refreshments had the legislators "going" on a proposition to donate $100,000 to a charitable enterprise. He told them 35 states had already contributed.

That night the legislative reference department telegraphed to 35 state capitals. When the legislature met next day the answers to those telegrams had been received and placed before the lawmakers, who had asked for information about their subject matter. They were about as different from the affluent and affable stranger's representations as a Wisconsin white pine tree is from a blueberry bush. The legislature smelt an Ethopian in the woodpile, and that bill for the appropriation of $100,000 for a certain patriotic purpose was not heard from thereafter.

New York Town Talk

Interesting Gossip Gathered in the Metropolis—"No Tipping" Signs Becoming Popular in Many Restaurants—Chess Expert Has Noise-Proof Room in Heart of Bedlam.

RESTAURANT
NO TIPS

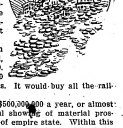
NEW YORK.—Establishments having in their windows the legend, "Tipping prohibited," are epidemic in East Twenty-third street, in the short block from Madison to Fourth avenues. A restaurant proprietor started the idea and then a barber shop in the same building, which is that of a large life insurance company, followed suit. Another "tonsorial parlor" on the ground floor of a skyscraper opposite, to meet competition, put up a sign: "No tips here." A second restaurant man is thinking of putting a stop to all gratuities, and a knight of the razor in Fourth avenue is gravely considering joining the procession.

"How does it work?" exclaimed the pioneer restaurant man. "Well, I've been here a year and a half now and all my waiters have been with me ever since and not one of them is dissatisfied. I give them about two dollars more wages than they would be able to get in other places of the same kind where tips are permitted. If anybody passes a dime or a quarter to them their actions depend on circumstances. If the man who offers it has apparently not seen the sign and they think it would insult him to refuse they let the coin be where he put it and say: 'Thank you.' I let them take it later, but with the distinct understanding that I do not sanction tipping. The second time that customer comes in he has seen the sign and has taken a hint.

"Occasionally a man asks if I would object if he gave one of the boys a little encouragement, to which I reply that I would prefer that he would not. The waiters who work for me are never 'broke,' which is more than can be said of many a waiter in the high-class restaurants who get anywhere from two dollars to six dollars in tips a day. The waiter who gets tips on a large scale, and I know of some of them who receive $40 to $50 a week in this way, find that their money comes easy and they let it go the same way.

"Objection on the part of the waiters to the non-tipping system, as it is applied here, is practically nothing and they rather like the idea of being sure of getting definite wages. At the time the public likes the innovation, and where the waiter is not all the time hanging around for a tip the customers get just as good service. Once or twice a week I dine out at some other man's restaurant, just for a change, and I give tips there myself because it is the custom of the house. I think though that the idea is spreading for I now see 'no tipping' signs in Sixth avenue. I have no doubt that the number of restaurants where there are no gratuities permitted will be greatly increased."

WEALTH OF THE EMPIRE STATE.

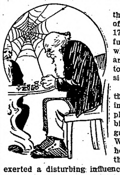


By the computation of the census bureau the wealth of the state of New York comprised in farms and other real property, factories, railroads, telegraphs, canals, machinery, gold and silver, etc., is $14,769,042,207. This is approximately one-seventh of the national total of $107,000,000,000. It exceeds Italy's wealth by nearly $2,000,000,000 and is about equal to the combined national resources of Spain, Portugal, Switzerland and the Netherlands. It ranks New York among the financial great powers, with a standing just below that of Austria-Hungary.

A per capita division of the state's wealth would give $2,000 to every man, woman and child, as compared with the national average of $1,320. It represents the aggregate possession of 15,000 plain millionaires, 50 Carnegies or 20 Rockefellers. It would buy all the railroads in the United States.

To this enormous wealth the state is adding $500,000,000 a year, or almost the valuation of a Baltimore. It is a wonderful showing of material prosperity, one that gives a prouder claim to the title of empire state. Within this single commonwealth is now contained more than double the wealth of the entire nation half a century ago and its annual increase more than exceeds the total value of our export trade when Grant was president.

GOTHAMITE SUCCEEDS IN DEFYING NOISE.

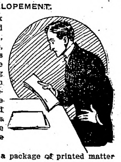


Proof against all the din of street and river is the sound proof shelter deep in the foundations of the villa of Mr. and Mrs. Isaac L. Rice, at No. 170 Riverside drive. The Rices are the successful leaders of a campaign against the superfluous whistling of the craft which ply in the Hudson and are also the pioneers of a movement which is to bring into being the Society for the Suppression of Unnecessary Noises.

Mr. Rice is one of the best-known patrons of the game of chess in the United States and the inventor of a gambit which has given him a high place among the experts who move knights and bishops over the checkered board. Chess is a game which requires quiet and contemplation. When Mr. Rice invited his friends to tournaments he found that the caterwauling of the sirens of the steam tugs which went up and down the river exerted a disturbing influence. He would have had to give up playing the game entirely perhaps had it not occurred to him that in the foundations of his house was a space which could be readily utilized as a sound proof refuge. It is literally a chamber blasted and hewn out of the living rock.

Despite its walls of rock, unpierced by windows except at the back, this room has a free circulation of air and is one of the most cosy and comfortable aparements imaginable. Only once in awhile, on very foggy nights, is the sound of the steam sirens heard, and then it comes only as a faint and far off echo. The room is 22 feet square and there is abundant space for six tables and numerous leather upholstered chairs.

HERO OF ROMANCE RECEIVES STORY OF ELOPEMENT.



There is a funny little story of a New York man who has been put into a book and can't find out what book it is. A few years ago this man, who is prominent in his own particular line, eloped with a pretty young woman. He and his fiancee rode on bicycles one morning up to the old Sleepy Hollow church, the Washington Irving church, where they were married. The church had not been opened for a service for years before, and has not been opened since; but the bridegroom's father was an antiquarian who had made a study of the Irving region, and on this account the use of the church was secured. The elopers were accompanied by a friend of the bridegroom.

A year or so later the bridegroom received a package of printed matter by mail. On opening it he found it contained several pages of a book, with the title carefully removed from the top. The pages contained an accurate account of the bicycle wedding, including many amusing features, one of them a wait under a shed for a shower to pass; another an encounter with a bunch of staid residents returning from church—it was Sunday morning—who gazed scandalized at the bride when her divided skirts flew back, revealing neat knickerbockers.

Since then the man has received at intervals more pages out of a book, faithfully detailing more of his private affairs. It is evident that he and his wife have been taken as the hero and heroine of the tale, a position for which their character and experiences fits them admirably. But what the book is or where it is to be found they have not yet discovered.

DEPARTMENT OF NATIONAL HEALTH

COMMITTEE OF HUNDRED PROMINENT MEN TO BACK NORTON'S PLAN.

Originator of Idea Says the Government Should Appropriate $100,000,000 Annually at Least for the Suggested Purpose.

New York, Dec. 20.—One hundred prominent men throughout the country have consented to the use of their names as members of a committee to further the movement for a national department of health, which was launched by Prof. J. Pease Norton, of Yale, at the meetings of the American Association for the Advancement of Science held in Ithaca last summer.

President Roosevelt has been consulted regarding the movement and told its promoters that the best method to follow was to secure popular indorsement by agitation. This Prof. Norton proposes to do.

The committee is not pledged to support any particular plan, and is free to recommend the establishment of a department with a representative in the cabinet, or a bureau under one of the existing departments, either a new bureau or the enlargement of one of the existing organizations like the marine hospital service. Prof. Irving Fisher has named the committee, which includes Andrew Carnegie, Thomas A. Edison, Archbishop Ireland, John Mitchell, John M. D. Long, Booker Washington, Felix Adler, James R. Garfield, Gen. Leonard Wood, the surgeons general of the army and navy, and many educators and scientists.

Needs $100,000,000 Annually.

To equip human machinery consisting of exceptional men organized and kept in action to make headway against death, morbidity, cancer and tuberculosis is the gist of Prof. Norton's recommendations, and he holds that at least $100,000,000 should be appropriated annually for the purpose. Thousands have been expended by the government for stamping out cholera among swine, but not one dollar was ever voted for eradicating pneumonia among human beings, he declares.

Several bureaus already existing, like the marine hospital service, the bureau of animal industry for meat inspection, and the life saving service might form the nucleus of such a department; while the work of the labor, census and immigration bureaus might be considered in its field, and, speaking broadly, its powers would include all measures to decrease death and sickness, and to increase the physical and mental efficiency of citizens.

Ravages of Tuberculosis.

Boston, Dec. 20.—Speaking before the Twentieth Century club Wednesday night Dr. Thomas Darlington, health commissioner of New York, said: "It has been estimated that 400 persons die every day in the United States from tuberculosis. This does not mean to-day only, but yesterday, the day before, the countless days before that, and to-morrow and the countless days to come. Were we in the midst of a devastating war, with a battle every day leaving the field strewn with 400 dead, the type of our daily newspapers would prove inadequate in size to emphasize the horror of the calamity. The country would rise in its might and demand that the carnage should cease."

Dr. Darlington advocated in combating this disease, the education of the state and the education of the individuals.

FOUND GUILTY OF FRAUD.

Officers of Nebraska Land and Feeding Company Convicted.

Omaha, Neb., Dec. 21.—The trial in the federal district court of Bartlett Richards, president; Will G. Comstock, vice president, and C. C. Jameson, secretary-treasurer and general manager of the Nebraska Land and Feeding company, controlling the 400,000-acre "Spade" ranch, and Aquilla Triplett, their agent, ended Thursday evening in the conviction of the four defendants on 36 counts of an indictment which charged conspiracy to defraud the government of public lands and subornation of perjury. The jury took but two hours to consider the evidence.

The accusation against the officers of the Nebraska Land and Feeding company was that they attempted to secure title to vast tracts of land within the "Spade" ranch enclosure in Cherry, Sheridan and Box Butte counties, Nebraska, by means of fraudulent homestead entries under the Kinkaid law, which permitted the homesteader to take up a section of land in the semi-arid districts.

Government Crop Bulletin.

Washington, Dec. 21.—A bulletin issued by the agricultural department Thursday shows the total production in bushels in 1906 of corn to be 2,927,416,091; winter wheat, 492,888,004 bushels; spring wheat, 242,372,966 bushels.

Texas Siftings' Founder Dead.

New York, Dec. 20.—John Armoy Knox, once widely known as the editor and proprietor of Texas Siftings, died suddenly in his home of heart disease. He was born in Ireland in 1850, son of a bank president of Belfast.

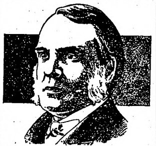
BISHOP M'CABE IS DEAD

NOTED METHODIST CLERGYMAN PASSES AWAY.

Apoplectic Stroke Results Fatally—His Career as a War Chaplain and Missionary Society Secretary.

New York, Dec. 20.—Bishop Charles C. McCabe of the Methodist Episcopal church, died in the New York hospital at 5:20 a. m. Wednesday. Death was due to apoplexy, with which the bishop was stricken several days ago while passing through this city on his way to his home in Philadelphia. Mrs. McCabe and the bishop's niece, who have been with him almost constantly since he was stricken, were at the bedside when the noted clergyman passed away.

Bishop McCabe was born at Athens, O., Oct. 11, 1836. He entered the Ohio conference of the Methodist church in 1860 and two years later became chaplain of the One Hundred and Twenty-second Ohio infantry. He was captured in the battle of Winchester and passed four months in Libby prison. His experiences as a prisoner of war were later recounted on the lecture platform. For more than 30 years he was popularly known as "Chaplain McCabe," and the title clung to him even after the general conference of the Methodist church in 1896 made him a bishop.



Bishop C. C. McCabe.

Following the war he became pastor of a church at Portsmouth, O., and later was associated as assistant secretary with the board of church extension.

His success as a money-raiser was remarkable and later, as secretary of the Methodist Missionary society, to which post he was elected in 1884, he added half a million dollars to the annual income of the society. He was a singer and his songs were a feature of his pleas for funds. He was chosen chancellor of the American university at Washington, Dec. 10, 1902.

BOAT BLOWS UP, MANY DIE.

Explosion on Mississippi River Steamer Costs Sixteen Lives.

Vicksburg, Miss., Dec. 20.—One of the most disastrous accidents in the history of the Mississippi river occurred at 11 o'clock Wednesday morning when the steamer W. T. Scovil, plying in the Vicksburg and Davis Bend trade, was destroyed by an explosion.

Owing to the large number of negroes on board it is impossible to ascertain the exact number of dead and injured, but officers of the boat who arrived here Wednesday night state that not less than ten nor more than 16 were killed. They say a like number were injured. The white dead are as follows:

Capt. John Quackenboss, master of the boat, Vicksburg, Miss.

Clerk Wade Quackenboss, Vicksburg, Miss.

Lavell Yerger, cotton-seed salesman, Jackson, Miss.

Clerk Joseph Smith, Yazoo City, Miss.

The accident occurred at Gold Dust landing, about 17 miles south of this city. The boat was at the landing taking on freight when an explosion came and the boat was blown to pieces. Many of the timbers were thrown hundreds of yards and the boat began to sink immediately.

Commissioner of Immigration Fined.

San Francisco, Dec. 20.—Frederick Stratton, collector of the port, imposed a fine of $1,000 on the Nippon Maru, which brought five passengers from Honolulu. It is contrary to the law for a boat of foreign register to carry passengers between American ports. The passengers had to pay a fine in addition to their passage money. Among them was Frank P. Sargent, commissioner of immigration. It is said his payment will be remitted when he reaches Washington.

Ohio Bank Robbed.

Felicity, O., Dec. 20.—The Citizen's bank here was blown open about two o'clock Wednesday, and between $200 and $300 in cash taken from a wooden box in the outer portion of the big safe. The burglars were evidently frightened away before they had blown open the combination for a hole was found drilled below the combination. Cash and securities amounting to $10,000 were in the safe.

Prison for Bank Robber.

Great Bend, Kas., Dec. 20.—Joseph S. Kerns, the former Chicago dry goods' clerk and newspaper man, captured here recently after holding up a local bank in daylight, was arraigned Wednesday, pleaded guilty and was sentenced to the state penitentiary for a term of from ten to 21 years.

E. P. Gamble Not Badly Hurt.

Pacific Grove, Cal., Dec. 20.—Edwin P. Gamble, of the Cincinnati firm of Proctor & Gamble, who was injured Tuesday night by a fall into a hole on Pine avenue, was not seriously injured, as was at first thought.

BLAMES SHIPPERS FOR CAR SHORTAGE

INTERESTING FACTS SUBMITTED TO COMMERCE COMMISSION BY A. B. STICKNEY.

Average Time Consumed in Loading and Unloading Each Car Is Now Nine Days—Senator Hansbrough Preparing Legislation.

Washington, Dec. 21.—President A. B. Stickney, of the Chicago Great Western railroad, has submitted some interesting facts to the interstate commerce commission bearing on the distance traveled and the time consumed in hauling and in loading and unloading freight cars, which he regards of importance in connection with any legislation which may be considered regarding the car shortage question. In arriving at his conclusions Mr. Stickney bases his estimates on the entire freight car capacity of the country.

They are as follows:

The average distance each loaded freight car is hauled is 250 miles.

The average time consumed by the railways in hauling is one day—24 hours.

The average time consumed by shippers and consignees in loading and unloading each car is nine days—216 hours.

Puts the Blame on Shippers.

Mr. Stickney then makes the following comment:

"If the law or any other power can compel shippers to load and unload each average car in four and one-half days, it would be equivalent to instantaneously doubling the effectiveness of the freight equipment of the railways—in effect adding to such equipment 1,700,000 cars without cost to the railways and without increasing their capitalization, while to purchase that number of new cars would cost the railways and add to their capitalization the enormous sum of $1,360,000,000, which, at four per cent, would add to their annual charges $54,400,000 to be collected from the people in additional rates."

Hansbrough Preparing Bill.

Washington, Dec. 20. — Senator Hansbrough, of North Dakota, who has taken an active interest in steps to remedy the situation caused by the car shortage, particularly in the northwest, has prepared the outlines of legislation which, he believes, if enacted into law, will tend to prevent a recurrence of the present condition of affairs. These have been shown to the president, at whose suggestion the senator's ideas were put into shape, and to Chairman Knapp, of the interstate commerce commission. They contemplate legislation along the following lines;

Giving the interstate commerce commission power to inquire into the equipment capacity, under stress of extraordinary requirements, of all interstate railways.

Giving the commission authority to require shippers holding cars in demurrage to unload and reload such cars within 24 hours after the cars have ben placed in a position to be unloaded.

Making it a misdemeanor for common carriers to compel trainmen to attempt to move trains containing tonnage in excess of the registered tonnage capacity of the engines hauling such trains.

Authorizing the commission to require the temporary use of idle equipment of one railroad line to supplement the overtaxed equipment of another.

Business Section Wiped Out.

Mexia, Tex., Dec. 20.—Fire early Wednesday destroyed the main business portion of this town, including six large business houses, with their contents, entailing a loss of over $100,000. Sleet and rain, accompanied by high winds, rendered the fire department almost powerless.

Overdue Steamer Arrives.

San Francisco, Dec. 21.—The Merchants' exchange has received a dispatch stating that the overdue steamer Pennsylvania has arrived at Seattle from Valdez.

QUITS FOR THE HOLIDAYS

CONGRESS HAS ADJOURNED UNTIL JANUARY 3, 1907.

Senator Foraker Finds Opportunity to Assail the President's Action in Discharging Negro Troops.

Washington, Dec. 21.—Senator Foraker occupied the attention of the senate in its last session before the holiday recess Thursday in an extended criticism of the basis of President Roosevelt's action in discharging the negro troops of the Twenty-fifth infantry on account of the Brownsville raid. He was replied to briefly by Senator Lodge, while Senator Scott sustained the demand of the Ohio senator for a full investigation of the matter by the senate military committee. A resolution directing such an investigation is before the senate for action at its next meeting.

Senator Ballinger has opened the fight in the senate for an increase in the salaries of members of congress, which movement was defeated recently in the house. He introduced Thursday an amendment to the legislative, executive and judicial appropriation bill providing for an increase to $7,500 annually of the salaries of senators, representatives and delegates in congress.

The senate adjourned until January 3, 1907.

After being in session three-quarters of an hour, the house also adjourned until January 3. Empty desks greeted the speaker when the house convened, and even among the members who remained the desire to get away for the holidays was superior to the inclination for business.

Mr. Mondell, of Wyoming, succeeded in passing his bill extending the time in which entrymen may make final settlement on the Shoshone Indian reservation.

A hundred members waited after the house adjourned to extend the season's greetings to Speaker Cannon, who showed by his manner that his heart was warmed by the interest shown in his welfare.

RUSSIAN KILLS HIS WIFE.

Tells the Police It Is Nobody's Business But His Own.

Butler, Pa., Dec. 21.—Max Kaftle, a Russia, killed his wife Thursday night by striking her on the head with an iron, and also injured a young daughter and a boarder. The arrival of a squad of police saved Kaftle from violence at the hands of a crowd which had surrounded his home. When asked by the police why he had killed his wife, Kaftle said: "I have a right to kill my wife; it's nobody's business but my own."

Fellow countrymen who knew Kaftle in Russia informed the police that he is wanted for murder there, asserting that he killed several wives, and that there is a standing reward for his arrest and return to Russia.

SUTTON STILL CHAMPION.

Defeats Willie Hoppe in New York—Morningstar Challenges Both.

New York, Dec. 19.—George Sutton still holds the world's championship at 18-2 balk line billiards, having Tuesday night successfully defended the title which he won from George Slosson a few months ago against the challenge of Willie Hoppe, who holds the world's championship at the 18-1 game. The score was 500 to 258.

Ora Morningstar of this city challenged Sutton for the 18-2 championship and Sutton agreed to play him in Chicago, 30 days hence. Sutton also challenged Hoppe for the 18-1 title, and this game will be decided at the Madison Square garden here three weeks after the Chicago game.

CHINESE LABOR MAY DIG PANAMA CANAL

COMMISSION REPORTS OFFER OF 2,500 COOLIES AT LOW RATE.

Whites Most Efficient as They Stand Climate Best—Negroes Unsatisfactory Because They Work Awhile and Then Loaf.

Washington, Dec. 21.—The report of the isthmian canal commission, sent to congress by President Roosevelt Thursday, contains this statement:

"On August 20, 1906, the commission issued invitations for proposals to furnish 2,500 Chinese laborers for work upon the canal for a period of not less than two years, with the privilege of increasing the number to 15,000. Four bids were presented, of which the only two accepting the commission's terms were also the lowest. These bids agreed to furnish the laborers for from 9 to 11 cents per hour, dependent upon the number actually employed. The selection of the bidder has not yet been made.

Negro Laborers Unsatisfactory.

"Another year's experience with negro laborers from nearby tropical islands and countries has convinced the commission of the impossibility of doing satisfactory work with them," says the report. "Not only do they seem to be disqualified by lack of actual vitality, but their disposition to labor seems to be as frail as their bodily strength. Few of them are steady workers. The majority of them work just long enough to get money to supply their actual bodily necessities, with the result that while the commission is quartering and caring for about 25,000 men, the daily effective force is many thousands less.

"Many of them settle in the jungle, building little shacks, raising enough to keep them alive, and working only a day or two occasionally as they see fit. In this way, by getting away from the commission's quarters, practical control over them is lost, and it becomes very difficult for foremen to calculate on keeping their gangs filled.

"The most serious question in regard to this class of laborers is that of feeding them, ordinary methods having failed to induce them to take sufficient nourishment to give them the physical strength necessary to enable them to work efficiently. To such an extent is this true that the commission is seriously debating whether to make the basis of employment a certain rate per hour and board, or a certain rate per hour, and deduct a certain fixed amount per day for board.

"White Men Much Better."

"The experiment with laborers from northern Spain has proved very satisfactory. Their efficiency is not only more than double that of the negroes, but they stand the climate much better. Since January 1 there have been about 900 of these at work on the canal, and of this number not one has died from disease. They have malaria in about the same degree as the white Americans, but not at all to the extent that the negroes have it, and there has not been a single case of yellow fever among them.

"Their general condition is about as good as it was in their homes in Spain, and they stand the climate very much better than the negroes. The chief engineer is convinced by the experiment that 'any white man, so-called, under the same conditions, will stand the climate on the isthmus very much better than the blacks, who are supposed to be immune from practically everything, but who, as a matter of fact, are subject to almost everything.'"

A summary of the other points in the report are as follows:

Great progress has been made in housing and providing comforts and recreation for employes. Fourteen good hotels are maintained by the government.

Health is excellent; no deaths from disease among 6,000 Americans in three months.

Twenty-five thousand persons employed; 3,962 accepted out of 4,809 from the United States, who were offered positions during the year.

Excavation work broke all records.

Bids for construction work by contract will be opened January 12.

Dredging done at a cost of 8.9 cents a cubic yard.

The report is signed by Theodore F. Shonts, chairman of the commission; Charles F. Magoon, governor of the canal zone, and John F. Stevens, chief engineer of the commission.

Chamberlain's Memory Gone.

London, Dec. 21.—The long retirement of Joseph Chamberlain, owing to gout and other ailments, has led to constant assertions and contradictions regarding the gravity of his condition. The Chronicle states that he greatly overtaxed his strength at the celebrations in honor of his seventieth birthday at Birmingham, with the result that he lost his memory completely. The past was a blank to him, and he could not remember what had taken place even a few hours before. Although his other faculties were and are uninjured, his memory is gone.

Report on Ginned Cotton.

Washington, Dec. 21.—According to a bulletin issued by the census bureau Thursday there had been ginned up to Dec. 13 of this year's cotton crop 11,099,001 bales, against 9,297,819 at this time last year.

Interesting Items Gathered in the Gopher State

The Prize Farms.

Minneapolis — Thirty-seven prize winners are announced in the famous contest inaugurated by James J. Hill for determining the best managed and best tilled farms in the Northwest. The prizes, which will be paid in cash, aggregate about $7,000. Professor Thomas Shaw, one of the editors of the Orange Judd Farmer, and Professor T. A. Hoverstad of the experimental farm at Crookston, were the judges, and they put in an immense amount of time and investigation, as they had to examine no less than 500 farms scattered over three big states.

The prize winners are as follows:

MINNESOTA.

Congressional Districts Nos. 1 and 3, (fourteen contestants)—First prize, J. J. Furlong, Austin, $300; second prize, W. J. Landon, Winona, $150; third prize, A. B. Lyman, Excelsior, $75.

Congressional District No. 2, (eight contestants)—First prize, H. N. Robinson, Marshall, $300; second prize, George Moore & Son, Worthington, $150; third prize, H. J. Nicholson, Minneota, $75.

Congressional Districts No. 6. (four contestants)—First prize, Thomas Harborn, St. Cloud, $300; second prize, Peter Palleson, Osakis, $150; third prize, F. C. Croxen, Monticello, $75.

Congressional District No. 7, (eleven contestants)—First prize, D. N. Tallman, Willmar, $300; second prize, T. R. Hansen, Elbow Lake, $150; third prize, P. P. Eddy & Sons, Willmar, $75.

Congressional District No. 9, (twelve contestants)—First prize, Ole Carlson, Erskine, $300; second prize, Henry Gunderson, Flom, $150; third prize, Joseph Lourent, Terre Bonne, $75.

For the Capitol.

St. Paul—The large bronze quadriga to be erected over the south entrance to the new capitol has been shipped from New York and will be put in place soon. The quadriga is the work of two sculptors, Daniel C. French and E. C. Potter. It has been on exhibition at the bronze works of John Williams, Incorporated, New York, where it has been viewed by many architects and sculptors.

The group is of colossal proportions. The base measures 21 feet by 13 feet and the height over all is 25 feet. Unlike the reproductions of most of the work of present day sculptors, it is of hammered sheet copper instead of being cast in bronze.

The method of making statues and other ornamental pieces in this manner has come down to us from the ancients, and as they had a full knowledge of the casting processes for duplicating pieces of this sort, the greater part of their work being of cast bronze, we must conclude that with them the same reasons hold good for making the work in sheet hammered metal instead of casting as now exist.

Caretaker for Mineopa.

Mankato—State Auditor Iverson announced the appointment of J. B. Hidge of Minneopa Station as caretaker of the new Minneopa State Park, near Mankato. The appointment is made under the law by which the park was acquired by the state, which provides that a caretaker should be appointed by the state auditor until such time as the legislature makes some other provision in the matter.

The legislature of 1905 appropriated $5,000 for the purchase of the land for the park, but the negotiations for the land and the perfection of the title consumed a great deal of time, and the transaction was not completed until Dec. 4. The owner of the land was paid $3,500, and the title has now passed to the state.

The park is located about four miles west of here and includes about sixty acres through which the Minneopa river runs. The chief feature in the park are the falls, of which there are two.

In Good Shape.

St. Paul—In his biennial report to the governor, Public Examiner P. M. Kerst reports the state institutions and departments, county offices and the state bank generally in a very favorable condition. Some criticism of methods and practices now pertaining are made, but the general tone of the report is favorable so far as these offices are concerned. With reference to the gross earnings taxes imposed upon the railroad, express and telephone companies, and the methods by which the correctness of the reports of such companies must be checked up, the examiner recommends some changes.

An extended examination has been made of the records of the board of control and it was found that in all cases the contracts let by the board were let to the lowest bidders, and all payments made under the contracts were within the limits of the appropriations.

News Notes.

St. Paul—On his retirement from the state treasurer's office Jan. 1, Julius H. Block will become general agent for the Commercial Life Insurance company of Chicago, Ill., in the territory of Minnesota, North Dakota and South Dakota.

Mankato—It has been learned that Rev. L. O. Fossum, wife and daughter, of Pipestone, were not murdered at Urmina, Persia, as reported two or three weeks ago. The family once lived in Minneapolis and went as missionaries to Persia.

St. Paul—Charles F. McCarron drops his suit contesting the election of James Powers as county commissioner.

Minneapolis—The national guardsmen want to elect the adjutant general instead of having him appointed by the governor.

Biwabik—John Altamari, an Italian, 20 years of age, was killed in the Mohawk mine near here in a horrible manner. While driving a tramcar underground the mule bolted the track, pulling the car against Altamari and crushing him against some timbers.

Hibbing—Actual work now has begun on the line of the Northern Traction company, which has this village through Chisholmn to Ruhl, and a large crew of men is at work grading.

Mankato—The Central Minnesota Poultry Association will hold its annual show in Mankato from Jan. 19 to 25, 1907. The association has almost doubled its active membership and this will assure large shows. The association offers four cups. They will become the property of the exhibitors winning them.

Lake Crystal—Miss Alma Gunderson, a clerk in D. T. Owen's general store, was standing near a large coffee mill which was in motion, when the ends of a tape line which she had around her neck caught in the flywheel in such a manner that she would have been strangled to death had there not been someone at hand to stop the mill. Her neck and face were bruised and lacerated, but not seriously.

Rochester—George E. Hare, a young man residing at Haverhill, had his right arm taken off by a corn shredder. While pulling the cornstalks away from the rollers his coat cleeve caught and his arm drawn beneath the knives. The flesh and bones of the hand and arm almost to the elbow were horribly mangled, and it was necessary to amputate near the shoulder.

Washington—Beginning Jan. 1, the following fourth class postoffices in Minnesota will be listed in the presidential class: Arlington, Braham, Deer River, Fairfax, Harmony, Montgomery, Roseau and Sauk Rapids. These offices will carry salaries ranging from $1,000 to $1,200 per annum each.

Rochester—William Hare, a young man, lost his right arm in a corn shredder, on the Donahue farm near this city. He was feeding stalks into the machine when his coat sleeve was caught and his arm drawn into the machine. The limb was terribly crushed and mangled, and he was taken to St. Mary's hospital where the arm was amputated.

Cannon Falls—The Cannon Falls light plant burned. This is little short of a calamity, for the city is now left in darkness. It is doubtful if the plant will be rebuilt this winter. The company owning the plant is composed of men living at Chatfield, Kenyon and this city.

Cass Lake—An unknown man walked into C. E. Battle's hardware store and asked to see some revolvers. After looking them over carefully he picked out the best one and wanted some cartridges to fit it. After filling the barrels he turned to the clerk and said, "You can consider this paid for," and made a rush down the street and into a dark alley. The clerk was soon in hot pursuit but was unable to locate his man until this morning, when he was found in an alley with both hands frozen. He is apparently insane.

Aurora—The sudden bolting of a balky mule is responsible for the death of John Altamari, a muleteer in the underground Mohawk mine. Altamari had the mule headed for the drift when the animal balked. He used every endeavor to get it started and had about given up hope when the contrary animal suddenly bolted towards its barn derailing the car of ore. Altamari was caught between the car and the mine timbers and crushed so badly that he died half an hour later. He was twenty years old and unmarried.

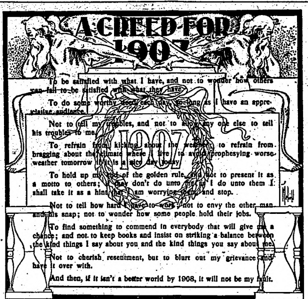
St. Cloud—Alvah Eastman, president of the state normal board, has filed his report with Governor Johnson, showing that the five normal schools of Minnesota have graduated 1,038 students in the last ten years, but the demand for trained teachers far exceeds the supply. The present enrollment is 3,200.

Crookston—Word has been received here from Congressman Halvor Steenerson that Vice President and Mrs. Fairbanks have given a tentative acceptance to the invitation extended on behalf of the Indians of the White Earth reservation to attend next year the celebration of the semi-centennial of the founding of the reservation.

St. Peter—Only the strength of a lock prevented C. B. Casperson, night operator at the Omaha, from being robbed and perhaps roughly handled by two men who attempted to break into the station.

Kilkenny—Charles Rau caught his right arm in the rolls of a corn shredder. The arm had to be amputated at the shoulder and hopes are entertained for his recovery.

Eveleth—Albert Larson, who was found injured and partly frozen in a cinder pit on the Duluth & Iron Range railroad, about fifty rods from the city limits, is dead as a result of his hurts and exposure.



A CREED FOR 1907

To be satisfied with what I have, and not to wonder how others can fail to be satisfied with what they have.

To do some worthy deed each day, so long as I have an appreciative audience.

Not to tell my troubles, and not to allow any one else to tell his troubles to me.

To refrain from kicking about the weather; to refrain from bragging about the climate where I live; to avoid prophesying worse weather tomorrow if it is a nice day today.

To hold up my end of the golden rule, and not to present it as a motto to others; if they don't do unto me as I do unto them I shall take it as a hint that I am worrying them, and stop.

Not to tell how hard I have to work; not to envy the other man and his snap; not to wonder how some people hold their jobs.

To find something to commend in everybody that will give me a chance; and not to keep books and insist on striking a balance between the kind things I say about you and the kind things you say about me.

Not to cherish resentment, but to blurt out my grievance and have it over with.

And then, if it isn't a better world by 1908, it will not be my fault.

Possibilities of the Future

By Rev. Newell Dwight Hillis

Memory gives us the past, and work uses the present, but our real life is in the future. Three hundred and sixty-five golden days lying before us. Think of it! One hour sufficed for Burns to baptize a daisy with immortality. One hour was enough for Wordsworth's Ode to Duty. One evening sufficed for Whitney to sketch his cotton gin. One winter's night gave the hours of Jefferson to take from the Gospels his scheme of ideal ethics.

For the youth the first duty is to grow. Growth means planning; planning means something definite; definiteness appoints certain duties for each hour.

Every day next year read one page or poem; every day meet one man greater than yourself, from whom you can learn, and help one less than yourself. Every day do some one stroke of good work that will stand, and cross one threshold to carry sunshine with you. Every day plan to do some one thing that will help men, not hurt them; make men, and not mar them.

You can so order your life as to grow in health and in enjoyment of God's out-of-door world. You can grow new friendships, and keep the old ones in good repair. You can so choose the music, the great paintings that you see, and the architecture that you study, as that music, and eloquence, and art and worship will enrich your life. You can make your daily work, however humble it be, to take on the culture of a full college course.

No matter how old you are, or how much you have done for society, you can open new furrows and sow new harvests of happiness for generations as yet unborn.

Are you young? Take Paul's ideal: "Whatsoever things are honest, whatsoever things tre true, whatsoever things are lovely, whatsoever things are pure, whatsoever things are of good report—think on these things."

Are you old, with all your life behind you? Remember Gladstone, who in his dying weeks wanted to do one more good deed, and translated Horace. Remember Tennyson, who in his last moments tried to write one more song. Remember that English hero who went out and planted just one more tree on the day that he died. Remember that scarred apostle who had sown the world with happiness, but whose dying word was: "I will forget the victories and the glories of yesterday; write one more golden page, stretching my hands out unto the things that are before."

This will turn the new year into a great opportunity. This will crowd all the days with duties and delights. Life will be worth the living. Work will bring rich reward.

Entertaining New Year Guests

The game of the five senses, commonly called "perception," is an excellent one with which to entertain grown people or children, or both, at a New Year's party.

One method of arranging the game is to have a table filled with things to look at. The guests are taken into the room one or two at a time and given three minutes to look at the objects on the table.

When all have seen the objects each is provided with paper and pencil and allowed three minutes to write down a list of all they can remember. The one who displays the best memory is given the first prize.

The objects displayed on the table may be of any number, but for the few minutes allowed for inspection 35 is a good number. Inkwells, pens, penholders, tea caddies, emeries, thimbles, book and any such articles may be exhibited—except that when two of one object are given, such as two books, the color or some distinguishing mark about each should be insisted upon and called attention to.

This method of playing the game calls upon but the sense of sight, and is more easily arranged than when all five senses are appealed to. The latter, however, is excellent fun and gives scope for some originality and a good deal of cleverness.

In this case the guests are led into the room five distinct times, each time to smell, taste, hear, see and feel certain objects.

If there is a large party it is best to offer a prize for each of the five tests, and have them written up after each one. Some care must be exercised in the objects selected, especially in the tasting, when nothing harmful or distasteful should be allowed.

For this test, as well as for the hearing and feeling tests, the guests are blindfolded or the room left absolutely dark. It is not as easy as it sounds to distinguish various musical instruments when they are not seen. A mouth organ, zither, mandolin, guitar and 'cello or flute—a few notes of each played in turn—are better than an organ or piano, which are more easily distinguished.

For tasting salt, cinnamon, flour, pulverized sugar, oatmeal and allspice are good, while for feeling bananas, potatoes, a glove filled with bran, a cap, a cane, poker, book and quite a number of objects are handled, this and observation being easier and, therefore, requiring more objects than the other two tests. The objects to smell are generally liquids, such as vinegar, alcohol, turpentine, benzine, glue, camphor and cologne.

A clever hostess selects appropriate prizes for each test, such as a puff box, with a puff within, for "touching;" a vinaigrette or a bottle of cologne for "smelling," an ornament or book for "seeing," a rabbit's foot whistle or a silver table bell for "hearing," and a soft scarf or shawl or a silk muffler perhaps for "feeling."

New Year's Resolution.

He had loved and lost.

"Never again," he sighed. "I shall never love again."

"Oh, yes, you will," rejoined the heartless beauty.

"Never again," he repeated. "I'm going to turn over a new leaf and save money."

New Year's Rush.

"You seem busy?" interrogated the caller in the corner drug store.

"Exceedingly," replied the druggist.

"Many patrons dropping in?"

"I should say so. We gave out 1,000 patent-medicine almanacs and 900 soothing-sirup calendars in two hours."

Father Time was observed getting his hair clipped.

"What is that for?" asked the friend.

"Why, peoplo are going too rapidly these days," explained Father Time, "and I want to fix it so they can't take me by the forelock."

The Result of Observation.

"Did your husband make any New Year resolutions?"

"I hope not," answered young Mrs. Torkins. "I have about come to the conclusions that New Year resolutions merely fret a man's conscience and make him irritable without doing any real good."

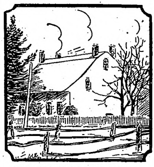
PRESERVE HISTORIC RELIC.

EFFORT TO SAVE OLD SCHENCK HOMESTEAD IN BROOKLYN.

House Was at Different Times Headquarters of American and British Armies During the Revolution.

Brooklyn.—The park department recently acquired a strip of land eight blocks long in Jamaica avenue as an addition to Highland park, Brooklyn, thereby making it one of the larger parks in the borough. It is the intention of the city authorities to lay out this addition as an athletic field, and a delegation of members of various boards of trade and civic societies recently visited Park Commissioner Kennedy to voice a sentiment looking to the preservation of the old Schenck homestead, situated on the new addition, and for the establishment of a children's museum and shelter in the homestead, which is one of the oldest Dutch residences on Long Island, a place where Washington is said to have slept, and which at different times officers of the American and British armies made their headquarters. As Highland boulevard runs through the park and is a favorite driveway, it is argued that the homestead would be a landmark which thousands would travel to visit.



OLD SCHENCK HOMESTEAD.
(Probably Over 50 Years Old and Still Standing.)

The house is of stone from the cellar to the second floor, about two feet thick, in old style masonry, and was probably built as early as the year 1650. It was repaired by Isaac Cornell at the close of the Revolutionary War, and by Isaac Cornell Schenck in 1835, before his marriage. Mr. Schenck, in making the repairs last mentioned, removed the north and east stone walls, replacing them with weather boards on the north and long, old-style cedar shingles on the east. These shingles are yet in good condition after 70 years of service.

Among the nine sons and daughters, the issue of the marriage of Teunis Schenck and Gertrude Cornell, was Isaac Cornell Schenck, father of the present John Cornell Schenck, who upon the settlement of the estate received the old farm of 80 acres, with buildings intact, and occupied the same homestead and most of the land up to the time of his death in 1885, and who bequeathed the same to his son, John Cornell Schenck, who has sold it to the city of New York.

The Schenck family Bible contains many interesting entries. Many a time, it is related, were former occupants of the Schenck house awakened and compelled to prepare meals for British or Hessian soldiers. A large number of cannon balls, muskets and other implements of warfare were left about the house and grounds and cellar of the house, but these for the most part have been carried away by visitors. Mr. Schenck has a rapier sword blade finely engraved, marked "1649," which was found in the homestead. The buttonball trees on the place are at least 100 years old, and the pound-pear trees have seen 125 summers.

WILL SEEK BURIED LOVER.

Girl Plans Journey to Frozen Alaska—Says He Is Alive.

Denver.—Somewhere in the sullen, silent places of the polar north sleeps a turbulent spirit that the flesh was known to the world as George Daniel Craman.

He lay himself down up there—somewhere, some place—where an ice-hung wind churns the snows on the frowning capes, nearly four years ago.

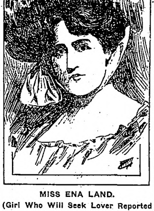
He was dead. They spoke the Word of God above his mortal remains, and they spaded him deep into the frozen earth.

Of these things there is no doubt.

Somewhere up yonder the sea whips the ice-clad shores and sings to the wild spirit of George Daniel Craman a requiem, stirring it with longing for the old days of strife.

His story is told along the Yukon.

But there arises in Denver a timid little woman, hardly less than a girl, to say that George Craman is not dead.



MISS ENA LAND.
(Girl Who Will Seek Lover Reported Dead in Alaska.)

As a girl she loved the restless spirit in the flesh. As a woman she loves a memory of him that was.

Ena Land, still young, and more beautiful than ever, says she is going to the northland to find George Craman—alive—and bring him home.

She says he came to her in a dream a few nights ago and called her to come and that she is going.

It is indeed a strange hallucination—if that it may be called—which has stirred this delicately nurtured child of wealthy eastern people to such a remarkable resolve. She is out here for her health. A trip such as she proposes to take would kill her before she left the steamer at Nome. But she says she is going, and she says she is going to find George Craman, the boy who died four years ago.

Craman himself lived in Denver a short time—as long as he ever lived anywhere. That was about six years ago. Prior to that time he had lived at Hartford, Conn., and there he met Ena Land, whose parents now live in New York city, where her father is a wealthy tobacco dealer.

Love was the result of the meeting, but Craman had nothing. He had just gotten out of the regular army, serving in one of the light artillery companies. Prior to that he had been in Australia with the border riders. He enlisted in the United States army in Manila. He was about 26 when he met Miss Land, and she was but 19.

Craman refused to marry Miss Land until he had secured enough money to provide a home. He struck upon Alaska as the best place to gain that wealth, and to Alaska he went. She heard from him by letter for some months, but about four years ago his missives suddenly stopped. Then she started an inquiry, which resulted in her receiving information from Dawson to the effect that a party of prospectors had returned to that place from a trip farther into the interior with a report of the death of George Craman, one of their party.

They said, according to her advices from Dawson that they had buried Craman at the spot where he died, but they did not say where it was. Miss Land accepted this story until a few months ago. Then, she says, she commenced to have her doubts as to Craman's death, because he began appearing to her in dreams, always calling for her.

The dreams grew upon her mind, and a few days ago she had a particularly vivid one, in which Cranian stood before her and called insistently.

That is the cause of the determination to go to Alaska and seek out her lost love. The trip seems to have no terrors for her.

German and British Railroads.

The gross receipts of the German railroads which up to the twentieth century were always well below those of the british, have now risen above them. The aggregate shows $384,453,500 for the United Kingdom and $306,589,500 for Germany in 1890, and $545,048,000 for the United Kingdom and $549,945,000 for Germany in 1904. The prosperity of the German railroads is shown by the fact that their profits rose from 2.2 per cent. in 1890 to six per cent. in 1904, whereas for fifteen years the ordinary stock of British railroads has steadily declined, the fall having been from 4.8 in 1890 to 3.9 in 1904, when all allowance is made for watered stock. Between 1890 and 1904 8,000 miles of railroads were built in Germany. In the same period England built only 2,400 miles of line.

Tons of Matches Used.

It is estimated that the United Kingdom alone manages to consume 500,000,000 matches a day, which comes out at about 12 for every man, woman and child. Smokers probably account for the greater number, so that they will be interested to know that about 90 tons of wood are used up in the form of matches every day, or about 30,000 tons a year. If one day's consumption of matches were placed end to end they would extend for a distance of about 15,000 miles. Sweden and Norway, where matches are made in enormous quantities, export over 25,000 tons of wooden matches every year. In France, where the tax on matches averages 8 cents an inhabitant, the consumption is comparatively small.

Emperor Has Million Dollar Train.

The emperor of Germany has the grandest railway train in the world. It cost $1,000,000 and took three years to build. Included in its 12 gorgeous saloons are two nursery coaches, a gymnasium, a music room, and a treasure room. The drawing room is furnished with oil paintings and statuary. The treasure room—a unique feature—is constructed on the safe deposit principle, with two large burglar-proof safes.

The Old Reform Days.

There was another class that were sufferers from the reform movement during these times, and them were the pioneer home steaders of Northern Minnesota. We mean those that came from the older settled parts of the country and took up homesteads in the newly opened lands of Northern Minnesota. It has been the custom and still is for this class of people to go to the Dakotas during the harvest and threshing season to earn a few dollars to keep themselves and families until they could get a start on their new farms.

When they went to the Dakota harvest fields during these times of reform they found, the roads full of men turned out from the eastern factories, all without a dollar and all looking for work, and as a consequence the harvest fields were overcrowed with men that were looking for work. They were not tramps but men from the east, that had lost their jobs in the east and had come west to get work.

Here they met the same conditions that were in the lumber woods and on the railroads, which were; work as long hours as we want you to and for what wages we want to pay, or there is plenty of men in the road down yonder to take your place, and you can go home and live on reform, this winter. We were informed by some men that went to Dakota during these times that the hours they worked were from 2 30 A.M. to 11 P.M., that is they would thresh until about 9 o'clock and by the time they had eaten their supper, taken care of their teams and crawled into the hay loft, it was 11 o' clock. Then the steam whistle would blow promptly at 2 o'clock A.M. to "Roll out" and get to moveing around. If you did not like it you could look down the roads and see plenty of men, as good a laboring man as you were ready and anxious to take your place. The rogues are always ready to take advantage of another persons distress, and they were not slow to take the advantage of this opportunity to increase their gain. They would buy, or rent a threshing machine and hire a crew of men to do the work, from Chief engineer to stable boss, and after they had thrashed a few weeks colect all the money the machine had earned and skip out and let the men that had done the labor take their pay in reform. If a laboring man was suspicious that he was liable to get beat out of his pay he did not like to say anything about it for fear he would loose his job and he could not get any work elswhare, so the rascals had a good chance to play the game to the limit.

And now we will draw this article to a close, hopeing that we have refreshed the memory of of some of the older voters and told the younger ons some facts that will open their eyes to the fact, that they can not revolutionise the conditions in this country with a so called reform party, but the best way is to stay by the republican, or democratic party and elect the right men to office, and not divide up the reformers into parties that are gotten up by men to get office.

A Bride of the House of Astor.

Margaret Livingston Chanler, great-great-granddaughter of the original John Jacob Astor, was not too proud to give her hand to a worker in the ranks of newspaperdom in New York, Richard Aldrich. Mr. Aldrich is a musical critic. It was while in pursuit of his professional duties that he became acquainted with Miss Chanler, and the acquaintance casually begun quickly ripened into love. The bride of Mr. Aldrich went to Cuba as a Red Cross nurse during the Spanish war.

Adolph Segal.

Adolph Segal, who was arrested in connection with the wrecking of the Real Estate Trust Company of Philadelphia, was charged by the dead president of the company, Frank K. Hipple, with being the cause of his ruin. Twenty years ago Segal toiled with bare arms over a soap caldron in a dark cellar in a tenement district. He had just come from Austria, spoke English with an accent and looked the typical immigrant. He invented a new process for waxing paper and out of it made $20,000. He embarked in business in a small way, but soon got up a warehouse scheme for which he had no trouble in borrowing $60,000. Then he built a sugar refinery and sold it to the sugar trust, making a cool million out of the deal. Finally he became connected with Hipple, and it was the speculations into which he led the latter which caused the collapse of the institution Hipple headed.

Stolypin's Ruined Home.

Photographs taken on the scene give vivid pictures of the work of the revolutionists in Russia. The accompanying engraving is from a snapshot taken of the Stolypin mansion in St. Petersburg soon after the explosion which wrecked the home of the Russian premier and came very near causing the death of his daughter and little son.

Battleship New Jersey.

The battleship New Jersey, which was one of the first American vessels ordered to Cuban waters after the present troubles arose, is one of the newest and most powerful of the vessels making up the American navy and was launched about two years ago. She is 435 feet long and has a displacement of 15,000 tons.

MUNICIPAL OWNERSHIP.

All Right In Theory, but Breaks Down In Practice.

Theoretically there is so much in municipal ownership of public utilities that the practical carrying out of its attractive features appears simple and of no serious moment, and for a municipality to take over and run water, lights, sewerage and even transportation appeals to taxpayers, and the trade is made without the first assurance that the conduct of these properties will be along practical and business lines.

It is the failure to assure the practical that works the evil, for municipal ownership is a general ownership, and a general ownership results too easily in its being no special business of any citizen or taxpayer to look into or inquire after the conduct of the properties under control. This leaves the management to a few, who soon find that they have only themselves to account to, that people are too busy to demand accountings and taxpayers accept any kind of report, just so there is the appearance of all being right and light, water, sewerage, etc., are given.

It is this indifference and neglect on the part of taxpayers to take note of municipal affairs which make municipal ownership of public utilities a hazardous and expensive matter. The theory of municipal ownership, with its great saving to each taxpayer, the extra service given and the great profits resulting, can all be placed in figures beforehand, but it is a failure unless the taxpayers shall give earnest and serious heed to the conduct of these public utilities, for unless this is done they will wake up some day with broken down properties and a big bond issue to make good.—Newbern Weekly Journal.

Faults Enough as It Is.

The political machine that dominates New York city is strong because large powers are delegated to it, and the expenditure of $100,000,000 is given absolutely into its keeping. We have faults enough without municipal ownership in most of the cities of this country, and the ordinary business man fails to see the wisdom of making the situation more complex and dubious than it is by adding the problem of municipal ownership with all that it implies.—Binghamton Herald.

"If."

"Municipal ownership," remarks the Winnipeg Free Press, "should not be discredited because of its tendency to increase municipal debt, provided the new enterprises are made to be fully self sustaining." Neither is dynamite dangerous if carefully handled. It is just about as safe to intrust the management of a municipalized service to the average municipal council as it would be to engage a seven-year-old boy to handle dynamite.—Montreal Gazette.

First Balloon Ascent.

The first public ascent by the Montgolfier balloon was made June 5, 1783. It was a spherical bag, consisting of pieces of linen buttoned together, suspended from cross poles. A fire was kindled under it, and the flames were fed with bundles of chopped straw. The loose bag filled out, assumed a graceful form and in a short time was completely distended. At a given signal the stays were slipped, and the balloon instantly ascended. Its velocity accelerated until it reached some height, then became uniform and carried it to an elevation of more than a mile. For ten minutes it remained suspended, then fell gently in a vineyard nearly two miles distant from the place of its ascension. The first adventurers to make an ascent in a balloon were M. Pilatre de Rozier and the Marquis L'Arlandes. In the basket of a balloon they on Nov. 21, 1783, rose to a height of about 3,000 feet.

A Queer Play In Baseball.

Here is a play in baseball that happened long ago. Perhaps it never will happen again. Did any one ever hear of a base runner scoring from first base on a line drive that was caught by a third baseman and when the ball never left the third baseman's hand? The play happened in this way: Andy Moynihan was playing third base for the Pastimes of Chicago in 1868 when a tournament was held. The Occidentals of Peoria were the opposing team. In the first inning, with a runner on first, the batter drove a liner straight over third. Moynihan shoved up his hand, the ball struck it and stuck fast in the hand. The crowd cheered. An instant later they saw something was wrong. Moynihan, writhing with pain, was running around third base. The base runner at first saw something was the matter and ran down to second. Then he ran to third and finally trotted home unmolested.

The trouble was that the ball, striking Moynihan's hand, paralyzed the nerves. The ball was stuck tight in his hand. It was five minutes before his fellow players could pry his fingers open and get the ball out.—Chicago Tribune.

Two Lads.

At one time, when De Quincey was living at Lasswade in simple and friendly relations with the people, who respected him not as a writer, but as a good neighbor, he formed a very delightful friendship with a little child, a boy of four years. This lad, a nephew of one of the housemaids, was the constant companion of the great man and would forsake any amusement for the pleasure of walking round a dull little garden with him. One day somebody heard this conversation between the two comrades:

"What d'ye call thon tree?" asked the child.

De Quincey considered and then said, with careful deliberation, "I am not sure, my dear, but I think it may be a laurustinus."

The child interrupted him with some scorn: "A laurustinus! Lad, d'ye no ken a rhododendron?"

At that time the "lad" must have been about seventy years old.

Use your gifts faithfully and they shall be enlarged. Practice what you know and you shall attain to higher knowledge.—Arnold.

Made a Gorilla King.

The craze among society women for queer pets is an old story. It usually ends through being carried too far. There is the case of Andromeda, for instance, and there is that other affair of the decadent Roman emperor's daughter, who had a pet gorilla, procured for her at great cost by an Arabian trader who supplied strange beasts for the amphitheater. One day the Praetorian guard arose and murdered the caesar. The gorilla, who happened to be present, strangled the ringleader, who was to have assumed the imperial purple himself, with its bare hands. This so delighted the Praetorians that they unanimously elected the gorilla, whom they took for a barbarian from North Britain, to the vacant throne. On the mistake being explained by a zoologically minded patrician, the divus caesar had to be killed and another one chosen.—London News.

THE GREAT TRANSITION.

Public Property Wasted Because "It Costs Nothing, You Know."

"Hello!" said I. "What's that?" And I stopped to pick it up.

"That?" replied the boy who happened to be passing through the school yard with me. "That is nothing but a lead pencil."

"But it is a whole one," said I, "and with a rubber on the end."

"I know it," said the boy.

"What! Do you mean to tell me that you have seen this here before?"

"Yes, everybody's seen it."

"All the children in your school have seen this lying here day after day and not one boy has picked it up?"

"Of course. What should we pick it up for? There's plenty in the school house. The town buys 'em."

And I had been given a text for a long meditation. Not pick up a whole new lead pencil? And a pencil with a rubber on it!

When I was a boy we prized even slate pencils. A boy who hooked anybody's slate pencil was baited until he gave it up, but a lead pencil—we fought for lead pencils as the Greeks and Trojans fought for Helen. We scoured the countryside for old horseshoes to sell to the blacksmith for money enough to buy a lead pencil, and, having it, we cut our private mark on it, guarded it, kept it as our last resource in trade. Many a time a precious two inch lead pencil has turned an important jackknife trade one way or the other. I never had but one lead pencil at a time and very often hardly that until I was fifteen years old. And these ten-year-olds scorn to pick up a whole one with a rubber! Think of it! The best eraser I had was a piece of rubber boot heel!—Henry T. Bailey in Journal of Education.

A DAY OF RECKONING.

You Cannot Fool All of the People All of the Time.

The recent condemnation as unfit for further service of a number of gas and electric light plants and the closing down of some of them at a dead loss to the taxpayers should serve as a warning to other cities, for this is the fate that is likely to overtake all such plants in the long run. For the first year or two, when no expensive repairs are needed and the plant is thoroughly up to date, it ought not to be difficult to make a good showing. For a few years longer the bad bookkeeping and inadequate reports, that are unfortunately the rule rather than the exception, may blind the citizens to the deterioration of the plant and to its increasing losses. But the day of reckoning inevitably comes when breakdown, bad service or demand for new equipment that cannot masquerade as "extensions" causes an investigation, and then it becomes evident that the plant has been a losing proposition almost from the start. No plant should be accepted as evidence of successful municipal management until it has been operated for several years and then examined by expert engineers and accountants.

Child Love.

Welcome to the parents the puny struggler, strong in his weakness, his little arms more irresistible than the soldier's, his lips touched with persuasion which Chatham and Pericles in manhood had not. His unaffected lamentations when he lifts up his voice on high, or, more beautiful, the sobbing child, the face all liquid grief, as he tries to swallow his vexation, soften all hearts to pity and to mirthful and clamorous compassion.—Emerson.

AT THE NEWSBOYS' DINNER

By MARJORIE BENTON COOKE

(Copyright, by Joseph B. Bowles.)

"I saw you drive up," said Thornton," as he came up into the hall, with outstretched hand, to greet his guests. "It's really very good of you to come."

"I should say it was at this hour—whoever heard of dinner at high noon?" retorted Mrs. Winthrop. "I'm scarcely awake yet, and in a humor usually reserved for my family."

"Mother, Mr. Thornton isn't 'the family,' you know," remonstrated Katherine.

"No—he isn't—worse luck," said their host, smiling. "You see, I had to have it at this hour because most of my guests have to get out with their evening editions."

"Their what?" demanded Mrs. Winthrop.

"Evening editions. I hope you aren't going to think that I've imposed upon your good nature too far, Mrs. Winthrop. I'm sure I couldn't ask any other woman of my acquaintance—"

"You don't mean to say that you haven't asked any other women?"

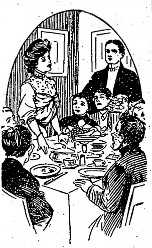
"Just you—and Miss Katherine."

"Good gracious—have you asked us to a stag party?"

"I've asked you to a surprise party. This is the yearly banquet of the Newsboys' club. I am entertaining, and knew you and Miss Katherine would be interested. Will you go in?"

Thornton led the way into the reception room, Mrs. Winthrop following, with an expression indicating mental indecision, and Katherine brought up the rear, radiant, scenting adventure. The reception room presented an unwonted spectacle. A dozen boys, ranging from eight to 16, were examining the room, with huge enjoyment, when the door opened, and lo! Eve entered—the eternal Eve, or the mother of Eve, shall we say, in a pompadour hat, and a fashionable dinner gown.

"Hully gee—they'se wimmen!" said a red-headed youngster, as he ducked under a divan. Consternation ensued, and for a moment panic threatened, but Thornton was equal to the occasion.



This is the Jolliest Dinner I Ever Went to in My Life.

"Hulton," he said to the biggest boy, who was busily trying to hold his hand over a hole in the knee of his trousers—"Hulton, will you let me present you to Mrs. Winthrop?"

Hulton blushed and limped forward, hanging on to his knee, as Mrs. Winthrop, as much at a loss as he was, murmured: "So glad to meet you, Mr. Hulton."

Thornton put his hand on the boy's shoulder.

"This is Hulton, Miss Winthrop."

Hulton looked at the girl's face, and into her very kind eyes, and said, bluntly: "How are you?"

"Very well, thanks, how are you?" she replied, holding out her hand. Hulton forgot the knee, and crushed the hand in his. Katherine turned to Thornton, intercepting his quick glance of appreciation. "Let Mr. Hulton introduce the rest of them to me, and you introduce them to mamma."

She moved away with the delighted, but embarrassed Hulton, and began a tour of the room.

"Who is the one under the divan?" she inquired.

"That's Reddy O'Connor—hates girls!"

"Reddy," said Miss Winthrop, "that divan is a little short for you—your feet are sticking out."

The boys, huddled about the divan like so many frightened sheep, giggled. Then in her simple, charming way, she shook hands with them all, and made them laugh and feel at ease.

"Mr. Thornton—dinner is served, sir," said the butler.

"Will you all come out to dinner?" their host inquired. "Hulton, you shall have the honor of taking out Mrs. Winthrop."

"Yes, and Reddy wants to come with me—don't you, Reddy," Katherine laughed, peeping under the divan.

They sat down, Katherine in the midst of the boys, and Mrs. Winthrop at Thornton's right. A solemn silence fell as the soup was served. Mrs. Winthrop, Katherine and Thornton toyed with their spoons, but the 12 sat stiffly in their chairs, and never moved a muscle.

"What the divil—I mean dickens—is ut?" demanded Reddy of Katherine.

"Bouillon," she answered. Blank stares greeted her remark. "Soup."

"It looks to me loike medicine—or durty dishwather. Is ut good?"

"Excellent. Try it and see."

Reddy tasted gingerly, all eyes upon him.

"It's all roight, fellers, go ahead!"

The quail was greeted with, "Say, will you look at the sparrows!" and as for the salad, it was refused with scorn, until Reddy, the official 'taster,' tried it and remarked:

"It ain't so worse—it's kind av' grass hash!"

Ices and nuts, cheese and fruit disappeared without comment.

"What do you say to a toast?" said Thornton, finally. "I have one that I should like to propose in this very superior brand of cider. Let's stand and drink it—To the ladies, God bless 'em."

The 12 looked anxiously from one to another, slid from their chairs and drank perfunctorily. "The Ladies" didn't awaken any chivalric thrills in their manly breasts. The ones they knew were apt to be overworked, and over sharp of tongue—but if Thornton wanted to drink to "the ladies"—why, that settled it. Hulton broke the silence that followed Thornton's toast, with—

"Here's to Mr. Thornton, the best feller I know, and to his girl!" They drank to that with real enthusiasm, crying, "Speech, speech." Thornton rose and laughed, and cleared his throat.

"Ladies and gentlemen: I am not much of a speech-maker, as you will find out. I'm just a quiet sort of a fellow who likes his friends and wants his friends to like him. So you see I'm very much flattered by the toast offered by my good comrade, Hulton. I think, with your permission, I will now resign the floor to our guest of honor, Miss Katherine Winthrop."

"Hear, hear! Three toots for the lady."

"I'm afraid that this is a conspiracy on the part of our host. I never made a speech before in my life, and I'm frightened to death. Reddy, stop grinning like that. I—I'd like to tell you that this is the jolliest dinner I ever went to in my life, and I've enjoyed every minute of it, thanks to our host and you. I wish you every good thing and I ask you if you will all dine with me some time? This isn't much of a speech, is it?"

As Katherine sat down, almost disconcerted at the steady gaze of 12 pairs of eyes, Reddy O'Connor was on his feet.

"I'd loike to say that ivry domned wan av' us 'ull be on hand fer that dinner—and if any feller has got any excuses comin' he kin make thim to Reddy O'Connor! As fer Mr. Thornton, we all know the sort of feller he is, fer he's the frind av' us all. I remimber the furst toime I laid eyes on him, I thought he was wan av' thim Cholly boys, an' I sez to him, sez I, 'Hello, Algy, where did ye git yer lid?' An' he sez to me, sez he, 'At the lid store, yer little Mucker, did ye lift yours?' er somethin' to that effect, an' I knowed he wuz my koind, all right, all right, an' frum that minute him an' me has been frinds, an' the feller thet sez annything against him gits his face punched by Reddy O'Connor—see?"

Reddy sat down amidst shouts of laughter, when to everyone's surprise, the shy eight-year-old bootblack, commonly called "the Kid," slid off his chair to speak.

"Mr. Thornton's been awful kind to ma an' me an' the kids, an' all you fellers know he's awful kind helpin' a fella git a start, an' I—I—," here embarrassment, threatened to envelop him entirely, so he marched to Thornton's side, and solemnly proffered a package. "I got a present fer you," he explained. "I didn't have much money to spend, so the fella trusted me fer it—it's a box of blackin'—it's the best blackin' made"—proudly. Thornton swallowed hard as he accepted it, and not a boy so much as grinned. They knew what sacrifices it meant to give presents.

"I think I never had a present I liked so well," Thornton managed to say, "and no hands except yours, Tim, shall ever put this precious blacking on my boots. Thank you, old chap—thank you all for coming and giving me such a happy day. I feel as rich as Croesus with such friends."

Then the dinner broke up, so that the boys could get to work on their evening editions, and Mrs. Winthrop thanked Thornton for a most entertaining experience. As she stopped to say farewell to Reddy, Katherine put out her hand to her host.

"It's very genuine, and very sweet," she said. "I thank you for it all. I like your friends and I hope that I may have the pleasure of entertaining them soon. Will you come?"

He bent lower over the hand, and spoke softly.

"Katherine, dear, couldn't we entertain them—together?"

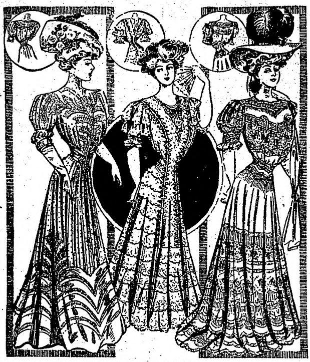
Was there an answering pressure in the hand?

"Perhaps—we'll see," she said.

And the boys couldn't understand the affectionate ardor of Thornton's farewell to them.

"Arrah, what sthruck him?" said Reddy, after they got out. "He was so lovin', I thought he was agoin' to kiss us good-bye!"

French Evening Gowns.



The Latest Development in Parisian Theater Frocks.

Pretty Party Given by College Girls.

Four college girls gave this pretty affair in a reception room of their dormitory hall. The room had a glowing grate fire and red berries graced vases and jars, a spray or two in each after the Japanese fashion. The chocolate—that favorite winter beverage of every schoolgirl—was served piping hot with a heaping spoonful of whipped cream on top of a tall cup. There was a deliciously strange flavor about it that was given by a pinch of cinnamon and a few drops of vanilla; then just before serving it had been vigorously beaten with an egg beater. Graham wafers, brown raisin bread sandwiches, candied ginger and orange peel were served. A variation from plain chocolate is made by following a French recipe. Take four tablespoons of grated chocolate to a pint of milk, sugar to sweeten according to taste; when it has thoroughly boiled pour over the yolk of an egg, beating constantly to prevent curdling.

This makes a very rich drink. A half pint of coffee added to the same quantity of chocolate makes a pleasing change.

Bazar Candy Booth.

Will Mme. Merri use a few moments of her valuable time in telling us how to decorate and conduct a candy booth at a church bazar, also give an idea for decorations for the fancy work table?

The Committee in Charge.

As I am just free from the throes of a bazar which has occupied the best part of a week, I feel qualified to speak intelligently upon the subject requested. The candy booth is usually the most popular of departments, a good money maker. Have only home-made candies, with the addition of salted peanuts, peacans and, almonds, also popcorn. If practical, have it popped on the spot. Decorate with white and pink cheesecloth with a fringe of pink paper rosettes across the top and hanging on graduated lengths of ribbon (tape will answer) across the front of the booth.

Let the attendants wear white with pink bows on white caps, pink collars and belts. Arrange the candies attractively in dainty boxes, baskets and bowls. Take orders for holiday confections. Have a pair of scales and be honest and fair, giving back correct change. You may add candy box favors for dinner parties and children's entertainments, also the snapping motto caps. Pretty cards to accompany gift boxes should be provided and I should think dinner and card-party score cards would prove a lucrative side line.

A booth which attracted much attention at our bazar and which would be adaptable for your fancy work table was built and ornamented at very little cost. The background was a lattice work made from strips of pink crepe paper. Over this trellis there were quantities of autumn leaves which had been cut from crepe paper, and fastened by pins to pink lattice work. The roof or top was made of closely placed strips of pink paper.

This scheme could be worked out in daisies, holly, or the gorgeous poinsetta, as all these flowers come on rolls of crepe paper at 16 cents a roll. It takes time to cut out the designs, but the redeeming feature is the very pleasing result with such a minimum expense.

MADAME MERRI.

Night Dresses Prettily Trimmed.

Flannel and flannelette night dresses are no longer the plain, unsightly robes they once were. They are trimmed with the heavier laces, insertion and soft ribbons, although fussiness is out of place on this heavier fabric and should be reserved for lawns and batistes.

Be on the right side, whether it be the minority or majority.

Feminine Tears Touch Hearts of Sterner Sex.

It is considered unbecoming by women to shed tears when in trouble. They are placing themselves on an equality with men in all ways, and, as men are supposed never to be guilty of such weakness, women also must imitate this stoicism and develop hardness or strong-mindedness, whichever we may choose to call it. It is very questionable if this is good for women in any way; it is a relief to shed tears, and many a man would be glad if it were not regarded as cowardice for him to weep. It is Nature's method, or one of her methods, of assuaging grief, and the inability to indulge in tears leads many men to drink as a means of giving vent to their feelings.

From another point of view, however, this stoicism is certainly prejudicial; that is, in the chances of marriage. Whatever men may say, it is inherent in them to like a tender woman; they see in her one who will sympathize with them, and who will come to them for sympathy. No man rreally likes to see a woman cry, for it hurts him and makes him uncomfortable until he can do something to relieve her, but all men prefer a woman who can and does cry. Not a foolish, faint-hearted specimen of humanity, who flops down at any trouble, however small, but really a tender-hearted creature who, although brave enough, does not try to encase herself in a kind of additional outer skin, or suit of mail, that will render her proof against sentiment. A woman of that sort, they not unnaturally imagine, will be a very undesirable helpmeet in this world of ups and downs, and they look for one who has not lost the ability to weep in true feminine fashion.

In spite of their moral strength, men always want some one in whom they can confide. What encouragement can they expect from a woman who knows how to weep, and regards it as undignified?

FASHION'S FANCIES.

Crystal buttons are fashionable on plaid silk blouses. Amber are the very newest.

The success of the short fur coatee is assured, whether it be as a pony jacket, semi-fitting coat or short Eton.

Although ermine must be used rather carefully in the daytime, it is excellent in combination with darker furs.

Many cloth suits in rather vivid reds are seen. These are usually worn with black lynx furs and a black lynx or black beaver mink.

Some of the new derby hats with sweeping aigrets of the same color held by large silver buckles are peculiarly suited to tailor-made gowns.

Brentford.

New town on the Watertown-Missouri River extension of the Minneapolis & St. Louis railroad in South Dakota. In the heart of the famous Jim River Valley. Country around Brentford is well settled and it will be one of the best of the new towns on the line.

Offers excellent business opportunities. Place has received a wonderful impetus from prominent South Dakota business men in vicinity who have invested and have organized a commercial club to boost the population to 1,000 in six months. It is a market for a million bushels of grain. Has an exclusive territory covering an average radius of 20 miles. Rails are laid into the town. Already has two brick banks, three brick stores, five elevators, 150 residence lots sold. First residence will cost $4,500. For particulars go to Brentford or address Commercial Club, Brentford, S. Seamen of Mature Age.

Lord Charles Beresford, who has just been given the highest sea command in the British navy, with the rank of admiral, is in his sixty-first year. Admiral Bosanquet, who relinquishes the particular service squadron, is 63, or a year older than any American officer on the active list. The new commander of the Mediterranean station, Sir Charles Drury, is 87. Vice Admiral Curzon-Howe, the new head of the Atlantic fleet, is 56. The chief of the new home fleet, Rear Admiral Bridgman, who is 58, did not reach his present rank until he was 55. Prince Louis of Battenberg, second in command of the Mediterranean squadron, is 52. Farragut was 60 years of age before he obtained flag rank and 61 when he fought his greatest battle.

The Sunny South.

Now when all outdoor farm work has ceased in the north, the term "sunny south" and all that it means, appeals with full force to the northern farmer as he realizes that with him it is a case of remaining indoors for the next several months consuming everything that has been produced during the growing season. In the "sunny south" something can be raised every month in the year, and practically every day can be spent out doors. No blizzards. No sunstrokes. Cattle-raising is very profitable. Large profits are made with little labor in growing fruits, vegetables, etc., for northern markets. Strawberries and cantaloupes are great revenue getters. Water unsurpassed. Work plentiful. Lands cheap and productive. For reliable information, address G. A. Park, General Immigration and Industrial Agent, Louisville & Nashville Railroad Company, Louisville, Ky.

Come to Congressman's Idea.

Some years ago Lemuel Ely Quigg, than a congressman, expressed the opinion that the police commissioner of New York city should be "an intelligent despot." The idea was ridiculed then, but Mr. Quigg derives some satisfaction from the knowledge that the grand jury of New York county has made a recommendation approaching somewhat closely to his view. The commissioner, says the jury, should hold office for at least ten years and should be removable only upon proof of charges which he has had opportunity to meet.

A Great Outside Remedy.

Most pains are of local origin—a "crick" in the back, a twinge of rheumatism, a soreness all over arising from a cold—are all cured by outside applications. The quickest, safest and most certain method is Allcock's Plaster, known the world over as a universal remedy for pain. They never fail, they act promptly, they are clean and cheap. You can go right ahead with your work while the healing process goes on. Sixty years' use has given them a great reputation.

Return in Age to Childhood.

Attention has recently been called to the curious fact that the shells of certain animals, such as cephalopods, brachipods and some bivalves, are commonly marked by retrogressive changes as age advances. "The old man returns to second childhood in mind and body," states a well-known scientist at Washington, "and the shell of the cephalopod has, in old age, however distinct and highly ornamental the adult, very close resemblance to its own young."

Teachers' Books Barred.

The New York city board of education has decided to prohibit the use of all text books prepared by teachers in the city's employ. This will bar Conrade's Grammar and Borachio's Song Collection. Only one member of the board voted against this action.

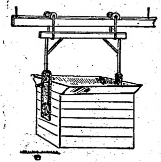
MANURE CAR IN THE STABLE.

When a large amount of manure must be removed from the stabling of animals a manure car will be found a great labor saver and when properly arranged prove advantageous in handling the excrement. There are a large number of barns where a manure car could be used to an advantage, but on account of the cost of installing a commercial plant there is nothing of the kind in use.

The diagram herewith taken from Prairie Farmer shows a home-made manure car, that can be installed by any farmer who is handy with a hammer and saw. The track to run the car upon can be made by spiking together two 2x4 well sized to furnish a smooth track for the car to operate. Rods of half-inch material with a hook at one end and nut at the other will answer to hang the track.



Manure Car for Barn.

For wheels, those that can be removed from a hay fork car will serve the purpose. The piece under the track is the same width of the track. The side arms of the car are made of 2x6 pine material worked down to 2x3, leaving the bottom part the same size as formerly.

The box part of the car is two feet wide and four feet long, constructed of matched material to retain the liquid in the manure.

Two sprocket wheels were located upon one arm with a dog to turn the car while emptying. This manure car can be installed very cheaply in any barn and save much time and labor in cleaning and handling the stable manure.

THE POPULAR CHEESE.

Government Test Shows That the Mild Cheese Is Favored.

The popular taste for cheese in this country has changed during recent years from a thoroughly cured, highly flavored cheese to a mild, slightly cured cheese. The day of the strong, rank cheese is passing. The present taste is well illustrated by a test made in the Washington market by the dairy division of the bureau of animal industry. Arrangements were made with a retail dealer to sell three kinds of cheese as an experiment. One lot was under two weeks of age and to all appearance had not broken down in the least. Another lot had been ripened from the hoop in a 32-degree temperature and was well broken down but almost without flavor. The third lot had been carried in the factory curing room and then held in storage at 40 degrees for several months, and had a pronounced flavor. These three cheese were exposed for sale in two different markets, samples from all three lots being placed side by side and customers asked to select. Thirty-eight customers selected the green, uncured cheese, 63 selected the mild, well-cured cheese, and 22 selected the cheese with the high flavor. It appears from this that a mild cheese, either cured or uncured, is now preferred by most buyers.

DAIRY NOTES.

If the heifer calf shows incipient horns, use a stick of caustic potash and water on them and kill the horns, then they won't grow.

When drying cows off give them dry food and milk occasionally only, making intervals between milkings longer and larger. Feed no slops.

Cows forms habits quite quickly. Teach them to stand in their stalls while being milked and they will soon respond by giving their milk freely when put in the stable.

It is astonishing how civilized a member of society it makes of a bull if he has to work like other folks and is not kept away from his fellows as though he was a criminal.

One thing is essential in growing good dairy cows as it is in good beef breeds, and that is in keeping pure bred dairy type sires at the head of the herds.

Gutters In Stables.

Many of the old-fashioned stables have no gutters, the floor behind the standing platforms of the cow being a dead level. The liquids flow over all and this is constantly wet during the time the cows are tied up. It is always advisable to construct gutters behind the cows, thus keeping the level part dry and clean at all times. This gutter will catch the liquids and will carry them to one end of the stable where they can be made to run into some kind of a receptacle or some absorbent that will preserve them for fertilizing purposes. The gutters greatly facilitate the cleaning out of the stables.

THE SILO

Information by L. A. Clinton, Director Storr's Experiment Station.

1. For general use we find a silo 14 feet in diameter and 30 feet high to be a very satisfactory size.

2. The bottom of the silo should be on a level with the feeding floor, where the cows are to stand. I would never dig a pit for the purpose of storing silage. It is far cheaper to get the increased capacity by making the silo higher rather than to dig into the ground.

3. Where the silo extends 10 feet or more into the ground the obstacle in the way of removing silage is that it has to be lifted in order to get it out of the silo. The only way of removing this obstacle is to dig a tunnel or passage way which shall have the depth equal to that of the silo, but this does not remove the obstacle.

4. There would be no difficulty arising from the presence of carbonic acid in the part of the silo below the ground.

5. The most frequent mistake made in the construction of silos is not making them air tight. It is absolutely essential for the silage to be kept in an air-tight silo in order to be preserved properly.

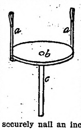
6. No better treatment can be given the inside of the silo than to paint it occasionally with hot coal tar. Each year after removing the silage the side walls should be scraped and an application of coal tar given.

A well-built silo does not need any special treatment each year in order to keep it in good condition. If the inside is given a fresh coat of hot coal tar the walls will be preserved. We prefer a round stave silo to all other types of wood silos. We prefer a wooden silo to either a concrete or brick, believing that the silage is better preserved where it comes in contact with wooden walls.

A HANDY MILKING STOOL.

One That May Be Strapped About the Waist.

A stool that is always under the milker and can be made in a short time is shown in the cut, says a correspondent of Farm and Home. The seat b, can be made from a good inch board, or the bottom of an old peach basket, which will give an idea of the proper size. On the under side securely nail an inch strip 3½ inches wide, across the grain to give it more strength. A 1¼-inch hole is bored in the center of the seat, completely through and a rounded leg, c, put in snugly and tightly wedged in place. The height of the leg is regulated by the comfort of the person using the stool. The seat can then be padded or simply covered with a piece of carpet tacked on. On each side are fastened straps, a a, reaching to one's waist when sitting on the stool, and through loops at the ends of these straps is passed a strap which is fastened around the waist while making.



STERILE MILK.

It Is Possible to Get a Product Free From Bacteria.

Sterile milk has been considered an impossibility outside of a well-equipped laboratory. Recently, two instances of absolutely sterile milk from the dairy have been reported, and the report comes at first hand in such a way as hardly to be doubted by any one. One of these was by hand milking, and the other by the Burrell milking machine. B. D. Woolsel, manager of the Tully farm's dairy, has taken a good deal of pains to have the milk and its surroundings perfectly clean. The usual precautions relative to washing the cows have been observed. Milkers are required to put on each day freshly laundered and sterilized suits, and to wash their hands before milking each cow, says H. H. Lyon, in Hoard's Dairyman. These and similar precautions are carefully observed, and all rules calculated to have for their object the production of cleaner milk, are enforced every time. It was not expected, however, that absolutely all bacteria could be kept out, and it was a matter of surprise when the bacteriologist made the report showing entire sterility.

The other report comes from Utica, and the test was made by the veterinarian. He first made a test by hand milking, taking care to reduce the number of bacteria as low as he could, with a result of 8,000 per cubic centimeter. He said that was good, as indeed it is where only usual conditions exist. Then he tried the machine, and the result was as stated, perfectly sterile milk. I did not learn whether this was a new machine that was used or whether it had been in use before. If the latter, this experiment goes far to answer the question: "Can the tubes and the machine be kept perfectly clean?"

Why Poor Cream.

The Iowa dairy commissioner says that one of the causes of thin and poor cream is the so-called water "separator." It is liable to be 24 hours older than hand-separated cream, for one thing.

Apples Good for Cows.

It has been found from feeding tests that apples are worth as much as roots or silage, ton for ton, in feeding the milk cows. This is a pointer to those whose windfalls are going to waste.

WORD IS MODERN ENGLISH.

"Chap" To-Day Has Not Meaning Old Writers Gave to It.

The name of the new play at the Criterion, "Prince Chap," would have been quite unintelligible to an Englishman of Shakespeare's time. Not until the end of the sixteenth century did "chapman," a trader or peddler, get contracted into "chap" even in vulgar speech, and even then for a long time it did not advance beyond the meaning of buyer or customer.

In this sense Steele speaks of "hunting after chaps," and Wilkes writes that "perhaps Mrs. Mead would buy, but she would be a hard chap." "Chap" seems to have reached its ultimate stage as a casual equivalent of "man" through the intermediate sense of a man with whom one has dealings, not of business, but of good fellowship.

The case of "customer" is very similar. Shakespeare used it to mean a boon companion, but "a queer customer" now means little more than "a queer man." There is a trace of the old companionship idea, however, when a young woman speaks of "my chap," and in "Prince Chap" itself.—London Chronicle.

DISFIGURING SKIN HUMOR.

Impossible to Get Employment, as Face and Body Were Covered with Sores—Cured by Cuticura.

"Since the year 1894 I have been troubled with a very bad case of eczema which I have spent hundreds of dollars trying to cure, and I went to the hospital, but they failed to cure me, and it was getting worse all the time. Five weeks ago my wife bought a box of Cuticura Ointment and one cake of Cuticura Soap, and I am pleased to say that I am now completely cured and well. It was impossible for me to get employment, as my face, head and body were covered with it. The eczema first appeared on the top of my head, and it had worked all the way around down the back of my neck and around to my throat, down my body and around the hips. It itched so I would be obliged to scratch it, and the flesh was raw. I am now all well, and I will be pleased to recommend the Cuticura Remedies to all persons who wish a speedy and permanent cure of skin diseases." Thomas M. Rossiter, 290 Prospect Street, East Orange, N. J., Mar. 30, 1905.

Money in Popular Songs.

According to a celebrated composer, the popular song, though sneered at by the superior, is in reality the ambition of most composers. Thousands of them, he says, "would give their ears to write a tune that reached the barrel-organs." And when it has been on the organs some little time a good many other people would wish to dispose of their ears.

Real Home of the Peanut.

Botanists have placed the home of the peanut in Africa, but some authorities think it native to Brazil. Louisiana finds the Spanish variety—a small, but fine nut—best adapted to the climate of that state. The "goober grabbers" of Georgia and South Carolina like the small white and red peanut of Tennessee, and each year shows an increasing cultivation in those states of that variety.

WHAT JOY THEY BRING TO EVERY HOME

as with joyous hearts and smiling faces they romp and play—when in health—and how conducive to health the games in which they indulge, the outdoor life they enjoy, the cleanly, regular habits they should be taught to form and the wholesome diet of which they should partake. How tenderly their health should be preserved, not by constant medication, but by careful avoidance of every medicine of an injurious or objectionable nature, and if at any time a remedial agent is required, to assist nature, only those of known excellence should be used; remedies which are pure and wholesome and truly beneficial in effect, like the pleasant laxative remedy, Syrup of Figs, manufactured by the California Fig Syrup Co. Syrup of Figs has come into general favor in many millions of well informed families, whose estimate of its quality and excellence is based upon personal knowledge and use.

Syrup of Figs has also met with the approval of physicians generally, because they know it is wholesome, simple and gentle in its action. We inform all reputable physicians as to the medicinal principles of Syrup of Figs, obtained, by an original method, from certain plants known to them to act most beneficially and presented in an agreeable syrup in which the wholesome Californian blue figs are used to promote the pleasant taste; therefore it is not a secret remedy and hence we are free to refer to all well informed physicians, who do not approve of patent medicines and never favor indiscriminate self-medication.

Please to remember and teach your children also that the genuine Syrup of Figs always has the full name of the Company—California Fig Syrup Co.—plainly printed on the front of every package and that it is for sale in bottles of one size only. If any dealer offers any other than the regular Fifty cent size, or having printed thereon the name of any other company, do not accept it. If you fail to get the genuine you will not get its beneficial effects. Every family should always have a bottle on hand, as it is equally beneficial for the parents and the children, whenever a laxative remedy is required.

Grace Brown to Chester Gillette

Woman's Simple Documents That Made a Criminal Case Famous and Virtually Sealed the Fate of a Murderer When Read to the Jury That Tried Him for His Life.

Herkimer, N. Y.—Printed below are letters which, within the past few weeks, have become known almost from one end of the country to the other as "Grace Brown's letters." They need no introduction, save perhaps the statement that these are the letters which were read at the trial of Chester Gillette.

They formed the most remarkable feature of that case. The whole structure of the prosecuting attorney was built upon them. It passes understanding why the murderer of the girl should have preserved a series of documents which, it is safe to say, spelled his doom from the moment they were placed in the hands of a jury of 12 men. It is inconceivable that Gillette kept them for their pathos, or the gentleness of character which they revealed, for he is not the kind of a man to whom such things appeal. It is utterly improbable that he ever recognized in them a simple literary beauty, although such they do possess in an unusual degree—the more unusual when it is remembered that Grace Brown was a country girl of plain education, who had worked as a factory hand.

Yet somehow Gillette kept them, and the American public has come into the possession of one of the most remarkable series of documents that ever appeared in a criminal case. As a revelation of character, as the written record of a tortured soul, they have already taken a place unique in the annals of real life tragedies.

Here are the letters:

"I SHOULD HAVE KNOWN"

"But Somehow I Have Trusted You More Than Any One Else."

South Otselic, June 21st, 1906, Wednesday Night—My Dear Chester: I am just ready for bed and am so ill I could not help writing to you.

Chester, I came home because I thought I could trust you. I don't think now I will be here after next Friday. This girl wrote me that you seemed to be having an awfully good time and she guessed that my coming home had done you good, as you had not seemed so cheerful in weeks. She also said that you spent most of your time with that detestable Grace Hill.

Now, Chester, she does not know I dislike Miss Hill and so did not write that because she knew it would make me feel badly, but just because she didn't think. I should have known, Chester, that you did not care for me. But somehow I have trusted you more than anyone else. Whenever the other girls have said hateful things to me of you I could not believe them. You told me—even promised me—you would have nothing to do with her while I was gone.

Perhaps, Chester, you don't think or you can't help making me grieve, but I wish things were different. You may say you do, too, but you can't possibly wish so more than I. I have been very brave since I came home, but to-night I am very discouraged. Chester, if I could only die. I know how you feel about this affair and I wish for your sake you need not be troubled. If I die I hope you can then be happy. I hope I can die. The doctor says I will, and then you can do just as you like. I am not the least bit offended with you, only I am a little blue to-night and I feel this way.

I miss you. Oh, dear, you don't know how much I miss you. Honestly, dear, I am coming back next week unless you can come for me right away. I am so lonesome I can't stand it. Week ago to-night we were together. Don't you remember how I cried, dear? I have cried like that nearly all the time since I left Cortland. I am awfully blue.

Now, dear, let me tell you. You will get this Monday some time. Now you please write me Monday night and be sure and post it Tuesday morning and then I will get it, or ought to, Wednesday morning. I just want to see what the trouble is why I don't hear from you. I was telling mamma yesterday how you wrote and I never got it, and she said: "Why, Billy, if he wrote you would have received it."

She did not mean anything, but I was mad, and said: "Mamma, Chester never lied to me, and I know he wrote." If you were only here, dear, how glad I would be.

Don't you think I am awfully brave? I am doing so much better than I thought I should. I think about you, dear, all the time and wonder what you are doing. I am so frightened, dear. Maude has invited me down for next Tuesday, but I don't think I can go. Oh, say, if you post a letter to me Tuesday morning I will get it Tuesday night. Well, dear, they are calling me to dinner and I will stop. Please write or I will be crazy. Be a good kid and God bless you. Lovingly,

THE KID.

P. S.—I am crying.

"COME AND TAKE ME AWAY"

"There Isn't a Girl in the World as Miserable as I Am To-night."

South Otselic, June 20th, 1906, Tuesday Night—My Dear Chester: I am writing to tell you that I am coming back to Cortland. I simply can't stay here any longer. Mamma worries and wonders why I cry so much, and I am just about sick. Please come and take me away some place, dear. I came up home this morning and I just can't help crying all the time, just as I did Saturday night.

I can't stay here, dear, and please don't ask me to any longer. Do you miss me much? I am so lonesome without you. I don't know how I am going to manage about going to Uncle Charles'. I presume I will have to write you to meet me in Cincinnatus, now we don't know anyone there. Chester, there isn't a girl in the world as miserable as I am to-night, and you have made me feel so. Chester, I don't mean that, dear; you have always been awfully good to me, and I know you will always be. You just won't be a coward, I know. My brothers and sisters are at a social reception to-night, but they can't get over my crying.

I do wish you were here. I can't wait so long for letters, dear.' You must write more often, please, and, dear, when you read my letters, if you think I am unreasonable, please do not mind it, but do think I am about crazy with grief and that I don't know just what to do. Please write to me, dear.

Lovingly, you know whom.
South Otselic, June 19, 1906.

"THERE ARE SO MANY NOOKS"

"I Have Been Bidding Good-bye to Some Places To-day."

South Otselic, July 6, Thursday Night—My Dear Chester: If you take the 9:45 train from the Lehigh, there, you will get here about 11. I am sorry I could not go to Hamilton, dear, but papa and mamma did not want me to, and there are so many things I have had to work hard for in the last two weeks. They think I am just going out there to Deruyter for a visit. Now, dear, when I get there I will go at once to the hotel, and I don't think I will see any of the people. If I do, and they ask me to come to the house, I will say something so they won't mistrust anything—tell them I have a friend coming from Cortland and that we were to meet there to go to a funeral or wedding in some town farther along. Awfully stupid, but we were invited to come, and so I had to cut my vacation a little short and go. Will that be O. K., dear?

You must come in the morning, for I have had to make you don't know how many new plans since your last letter, in order to meet you Monday. I dislike waiting until Monday, but now that I have to, I don't think it anything but fair that you should come up Monday morning. But, dear, you must see the necessity yourself of getting here and not making me wait. If you dislike the idea of coming Monday morning and can get a train up there Sunday night, you would come up Sunday night and be there to meet me. Perhaps that would be the best way. All I care is that I don't want to wait there all day or half a day. I think there is a train that leaves the Lehigh at six something Sunday night. I do not know what I would do if you were not to come. I am about crazy. I have been bidding good-by to some places to-day. There are so many nooks, dear, and all of them so dear to me. I have lived here nearly all my life.

First I said good-by to the spring house with its great masses of green moss; then the apple tree where we had our playhouse; then the "Beehive," a cute little house in the orchard, and, of course all the neighbors that have mended my dresses from a little tot up to save me a threshing I really deserved.

"Oh, dear, you don't realize what all this means to me. I know I shall never see any of them again, and mamma, great Heaven, how I do love mamma! I don't know what I will do without her. She is never cross and she always helps me so much. Sometimes I think if I tell mamma—but I can't. She has trouble enough as it is, and I couldn't break her heart like that.

If I came back dead, perhaps, if she doesn't know, she won't be angry with me. I will never be happy again, dear. I wish I could die. You will never know what you have made me suffer, dear. I miss you and want to see you, but I wish I could die. I am going to bed now, dear. Please come and don't make me wait there. If you had made plans for something Sunday, you must come Monday morning.

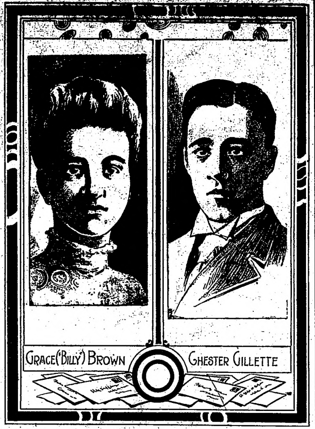
Please think, dear, that I had to give up a whole summer's pleasure and you surely will be brave enough to give up one evening for me. I shall expect and look for you Monday forenoon.

Heaven bless you until then.

Lovingly and with kisses,

THE KID.

P. S.—Please come up Sunday night, dear.



"CAN'T YOU COME TO ME?"

"Chester, I Need You More Than You Think I Do."

South Otselic, June 26, 1906, Monday Night—Dear Chester: I am much too tired to write a decent letter or even follow the line, but I have been uneasy all day, and I can't go to sleep because I am sorry I sent you such a hateful letter this morning, so I am going to write and ask your forgiveness, dear. I was cross and wrote things I ought not to have written. I am sorry, dear, and I shall never feel quite right about all this until you write and say you forgive me. I was ill and did not realize what I was writing, and then this morning mamma gave my letters to papa before I was down. I should not have had it posted but it went long before I was awake. I am very tired to-night, dear. I have been helping mamma sew to-day. My sister is making me a new white Peter Pan suit, and I do get so tired having it fitted, and then there are other ried and tired. I never liked to have dresses fitted, and now it is ten times worse. Oh! Chester, you will never know how glad I shall be when this worry is all over. I am making myself ill over it. Maybe there is no use to worry, but I do and I guess everyone does. I am quite brave to-night, and I always feel better after I write you, Chester, so I hope you mind the hateful things I say and I hope you won't mind my writing so much. Where do you suppose we will be two weeks from to-night? I wish you would write and tell me, dear, all about your coming. I am awfully afraid I can't go to Hamilton, Chester.

Papa can't take me and I am nervous about going alone. You see I would have to ride quite a distance before I could take the train and then there is a long wait, and, Chester, I am getting awfully sensitive. If I can't go up there what shall I do? Do you think it would be wise to come back there? Could you come to Deruyter and meet me? I have relatives there, but perhaps I could arrange it somehow. I was pleased yesterday morning. You know I have a lot of bed quilts—six, I guess—and I was asking mamma where they were and saying I wished I had a dozen, when my little sister said: "Just you and someone else will not need so many." Of course, my face got crimson and the rest of the family roared. Mamma is so nice about fixing my dresses; she has them all up now in nice shape. You remember the white dress I wore and you once asked me why I didn't have a new yoke. Well, she has almost made a new dress out of that. I am afraid the time will seem awfully long before I see you, Chester. I wish you would always post your letters in the morning after you write them or the same night. They are a day later here if you wait until noon. Of course I will be glad to get them, only I dislike waiting for them.

Oh! dear, I do get so blue, Chester. Please don't wait until the last of the week before you come. Can't you come the first of the week? Chester, I need you more than you think I do. I really think it will be impossible for me to stay here any longer than this week. I want to please you, but I think, Chester, it would be very unwise.

If I should stay here and anything should happen I would always regret it for your sake. You do not know papa as well as I do, and I would not like you to be disgraced here. We have both suffered enough and I would rather go away quietly. In a measure I will suffer the more, but I will not complain if you will not get cross and will come for me. I must close. Write me Wednesday night, dear, and tell me what you think about everything. Let's not leave all our plans until the last moment, and, above all, please write and say you forgive me for that letter I sent you this morning. I am sorry and if I were there I know you would say it would be all O. K.

Lovingly,

THE KID.

"MY LITTLE SISTER CAME"

"I Told Her I Guessed My Fortune Was Pretty Well Told Now."

South Otselic, June 23d, 1906, Sunday Night—My Dear Chester: I was glad to hear from you and surprised as well. I thought you would rather have my letters affectionate, but yours was so businesslike that I have come to the conclusion that you wish mine to be that way. I may tell you, though, that I am not a business woman, and so presume that these letters will not satisfy you any more than the others did. I would not like to have you think I was not glad to hear from you, for I was very glad, but it was not the kind of letter I had hoped to get from you.

I think, pardon me, that I understand my position and that it is rather unnecessary for you to be so frightfully frank in showing it to me. I can see my position as keenly as anyone, I think. You say you were surprised, but you thought I would be discouraged. I don't see why I should be discouraged. What words have I had from you since I came home to encourage me?

You write as though I was the one to blame because the girls wouldn't come. I invited them here because I thought I wouldn't be so lonesome. I am sure I cannot help it because mamma is away. As to the financial difficulty, I am the one who will be most affected by that. You say "your trip." Won't it be your trip as well as mine? I understand how you feel about the affair. You consider me as something troublesome that you bothered with. You think if it wasn't for me you could do as you liked all summer and not be obliged to give up your position there. I know how you feel, but once in awhile you make me see these things a great deal more plainly than ever.

Chester, I don't suppose you will ever know how I regret being all this trouble to you. I know you hate me, and I can't blame you one bit. My whole life is ruined, and in a measure yours is, too. Of course, it's worse for me than for you, but the world and you, too, may think I am the one to blame, but somehow I can't, just simply can't think that I am, Chester. I said No so many times, dear. Of course, the world will not know that, but it's true all the same.

My little sister came up just a minute ago with her hands full of daisies and asked if I didn't want my fortune told. I told her I guessed it was pretty well told now. I don't want you to mind this letter, for I am blue to-night and get so mad when the girls write things about me. Your letter was nice, and I was glad to get it. I simply feel "out of sorts" to-night.

When you are cross, just think I am sick and can't help all this. If you were me, you couldn't help finding fault, I know. I don't dare think how glad I will be to see you. If you wrote me a letter like this I wouldn't write in a long time, but I know you won't tease me in that way. You will just forget it and be your own dear self. You know I always am cross in the beginning. It was that way Saturday night, so don't be angry, dear.

Lovingly,

KID.

IMMORTALITY.

Shakespeare's shade was perusing one of our theatrical programs.

"It is all very well," he mused, "to read, '"Hamlet," by William Shakespeare,' but think if it were instead:

"'Costumes designed by Shakespeare, Paris.'

"'Scenery painted by W. Shakespeare.'

"'Electrical effects by the Shakespeare company, Stratford-on-Avon.'

"'Interpolated coon songs by Will Shakespeare.'"

Disappointed and remorseful, he relapsed into spooky silence.—N. Y. Times.

Omissions of History.

Henry VIII had espoused his sixth wife.

"Mrs. Parsons' idea of trial marriages," he said, "strikes me as being a pretty good thing. When I get tired of this one"—here he drew his hand, with an expressive gesture, across the royal throat.'

Wife No. 6, however, succeeded in convincing him that this was a marriage for keeps, and he died subsequently of chagrin, leaving no mourners worth mentioning.—Chicago Tribune.

Knew What He Was Talking About.

Miss Robinson (to stranger at reception)—Do you see that plain-looking girl over there? She has just got married. I'm sure I wonder what her husband married her for.

"I have no doubt he married her for her money," replied the stranger.

"Oh, I wouldn't think so badly of him as that," said Miss Robinson.

"But I ought to know," replied the stranger; "you see, I am the man who married her."—Tit-Bits.

John's Opinion.

"John, my poor little dog, Prince, has something the matter with him. What do you suppose it is?" said the fashionable lady.

"And sure, do you kiss him, ma'am?" asked the coachman.

"Of course, I kiss him."

"Well, then, perhaps it's microbes he has ma'am."—Yonkers Statesman.

Nerve.

"I think Wilkins has the making of an outlaw or bandit in him?"

"Why so?"

"I saw a Pullman porter brush him off the other day and he gave him a five-cent cigar and said: 'On your way and look pleasant.'"—Milwaukee Sentinel.

What He Needed.

Cholly Nowitt—D'ye know, Miss Smart, though I've only met you, there seems to be a sort of intellectual sympathy between us? You know just how to appeal to my tastes, you see. Are you a literary woman?

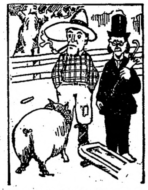
Dolly Smart—No; I'm a kindergarten teacher.—Tit-Bits.

A Blow.

Young Husband—I suppose, now I have married your daughter, you will continue to manage her business affairs for her?

Father—Yes, sir! I'm perfectly willing to manage her business affairs if you'll manage her.—Detroit Free Press.

THE FARMER'S IDEA.



The Country Parson—That is an uncommonly fine large hog, deacon.

The Farmer—Yes, sir. Ah! If we wuz as fit to die as him, sir!—Cincinnati Commercial-Tribune.

Called In.

There are no birds in last year's nests,
No feet in last year's shoes;
And in the chilly autumn days
There are no peek-a-boos.
—Houston Post.

Wholesale Infatuation.

First Woman—Too bad about Bill.

Second Woman—What's he done?

First Woman—Haven't you heard? He made so much money last year that he couldn't stand it. He's just married a chorus.—Judge.

Editorial Gentleness.

The office-boy had pied the first page by dropping the form down two flights of stairs.

"I wish," murmured the gentle editor, "that you had broken the news more gently."—Judge.

Getting a Head.

"You can't ever get ahead, my son, so long as you dissipate so."

"Can't eh? Can't get a head? I'd like to know how you think I got this one?"—Judge.

These Investigating Times.

Burglar—Have I gotten everything?

Dimpleton—Do you expect me to tell you that?

Burglar—I think you ought, as a matter of honor.—Judge.

NO ROOM FOR LOVE.

A silvery stream, with waters dark,
Beneath the woodland shade;
A birch canoe, a lover tall
And a little blue-eyed maid.
Dreamily drifted the birch canoe,
With the maid and the man so tall;
Just a little canoe, with room for two,
But no room for Love at all.

The lover gazed in those eyes of blue
While his heart was beating fast;
The maiden idly trailed her hand
In the wavelets rippling past.
And a little Love god hov'ring o'er
Came down like a bounding ball.
Into the canoe, with room for two,
And no room for Love at all.

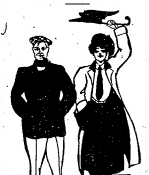
The Love god slyly pushed the man
To his knees before the maid,
Then merrily laughed in wicked glee
At the havoc he had made.
A scream! A splash! In charity
Please let the curtain fall;
In the little canoe there was room for two,
But no room for Love at all!
—Sarah Thurston Hayden, in N. Y. Press.

All Nodded.

"Do you think they approved of my sermon?" asked the newly-appointed rector, hopeful that he had made a good impression on his parishioners.

"Yes, I think so," replied his wife; "they were all nodding."—Tit Bits.

STILL HOPEFUL.



She (teasingly)—What a fine-looking fellow the half back on the other team is. His features are so regular.

He (savagely)—H'm. The match isn't over yet.—Cincinnati Commercial-Enquirer.

The Colonel's Fate.

A doughty Kentuckian colonel,
Whose watchword was "By the etolonel!"
Had a son who was smart,
Yet who broke his dad's heart,
By his work on a yellow-hued jolonel.
—Judge.

He Remembered.

They had been married just a mont

"Do you know what day this is she asked sweetly at the breakfas table.

"Yes," he answered, nervously; "this is the day I have to pay the second installment on that wedding ring."—Yonkers Statesman.

A Sense of Rectitude.

"Our corporation never does anything that I am not perfectly sure is right," said Mr. Dustin Stax.

"How can you be sure?"

"We have a fine staff of lawyers hired to demonstrate that anything we want to do is all right."—Washington Star.

Flattering.

"How much postage will this require?" asked the young author. "It is one of my manuscripts."

"Two cents an ounce," answered the post office clerk. "That's first-class matter."

"Oh, thank you!"—Judge.

Close Figuring.

"Bliggins is railing at his fire insurance company."

"What for?"

"He says food has become so valuable that he ought to be able to recover the price of what the cook allows to burn."—Washington Star.

Improving the Verses.

The Poet—What did you do with those patriotic verses of mine?

The Editor—Tried to improve them.

"Improve them?"

"Yes; I burned them. There wasn't enough fire in 'em."—Yonkers Statesman.

An Expert Opinion.

"What we want to do," said the moralist, "is to strive for the uplifting of our fellow-man."

"That is easy," said the flying machine inventor. "The difficulty is to keep him from dropping back to earth with a rude jar."—Washington Star.

The Widow's Property.

Plumduff—Has that charming widow any property?

Ketchum—Yes, considerable.

Plumduff—Real estate or personal?

Ketchum—Personal. She has six children.

Heroic.

"She dotes on heroes."

"Then she should adore her husband."

"Why did he ever do anything heroic?"

"He married her."—Houston Post

Let Her See It.

Bashfulman—I'm going to propose to Miss Sleigh to-night, and I'm afraid she's going to turn me down.

Friend—Why don't you take along the diamond you're going to give her? That helps some.—Detroit Free Press.
